70. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th September, attributes the diseases in jails to the bad dieting of prisoners, and to the excessive amount of work taken from them. The editor thinks that prisoners are led in consequence either to feign illness or to eat such things secretly as will help them in being placed on the sick list, and invites the attention of Government to the matter.

The editor also says that the Jail authorities, in order to prove their good administration, point out that prisoners always increase in weight during their stay in jail, but this is due to other reasons. They are in a state of suspense in the first place while undertrial, and, secondly, no attention is paid to their health and cleanliness before conviction. The editor hopes that Government will see that undertrial prisoners are better looked after, and that sufficient attention is bestowed on their requirements.

GARHWALI,
August, 1906.

Transport arrangements in Garhwal.

71. The Garhwali (Dehra Dun), for August, complains of the hardships to which villagers are subjected owing to their forced employment as coolies both for Government and public purposes, and suggests that a coolie depôt be established at Kotdwar or Srinagar, and mules employed for transport purposes, or that the duties be entrusted to the Transport department. The editor complains that the coolies are underpaid owing to the dishonesty of officials employed to disburse wages; and it is therefore that they are unwilling to undertake the duty.

ADVOCATE,
9th September, 1906.

United Provinces exhibition at Chaubepur, district Cawnpore.

72. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of 9th September, has invited suggestions for proposed United Provinces exhibition to be held at Chaubepur, district Cawnpore, along with the annual Chaubepur Sri Krishna Lila fair in October.

VI.—RAILWAY.

RAHBAR,
7th September, 1906.

Catering arrangements and reductions of the native staff on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

73. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 7th September, says that, if the matter is gone into carefully, it will be hard to find one single station on the line where the rules regulating catering arrangements are properly observed, and it will be found that most station-masters sign the station pass once every month or every two months. The amount that the shopkeepers have now to pay to the contractors exceeds what they had to pay to the railway authorities for the license ; and hence it is that the prices are so high, and that the articles supplied are stale and of inferior quality.

The editor also remarks that the reductions made by the Deputy Traffic Superintendent have produced very injurious results and that the administration of the line has deteriorated since Mr. Pope went on furlough. The wholesale dismissal of Indian clerks contrasts most unfavourably with the retention of lady type-writers.

JASUS,
7th September, 1906.

The reductions in the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

74. The Jásus (Agra), of 7th September, says that the Traffic Superintendent has through old age and feebleness allowed his Deputy to have his own way. The reductions have all been made in the Audit and Claims sections, old Indian clerks have been dismissed to make room for European guards who were in excess and have since been employed as ticket checkers; the profits have fallen considerably, and work is in a state of utter confusion. The editor seems to suggest that Mr. Pope's men have been particularly selected for dismissal and reduction.

JASUS,
7th September, 1906.

The contractors on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

75. The Jásus (Agra), of 7th September, says that careful inquiry has led to the conclusion that the complaints made by the Naiyar-i-Azam about Chunni Lal, Muhammad Husain and Madan Mohan, contractors, are fully justified, and that the support given to them by the Mukhbir-i-Alam is due to interested motives.

The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 7th September, expresses its surprise at the indifference of the Railway authorities to the complaints regarding catering arrangements, and expresses a desire to move the Local and Viceregal Governments in the matter, if the complaints are not attended to without delay.

VII.—POST OFFICE.

RAHBAR,
7th September, 1906.

Moradabad Post office.

76. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 7th September, invites the attention of the Superintendent of Post offices, Moradabad, to the delay in the delivery of letters and the discourteous attitude of the clerical staff of the local post office, and points out that there is no letter-box on the road from Faizganj Police Station to the Town Hall.

JASUS,
7th September 1906.

The Head Post office at Moradabad.

77. The Jásus (Agra), of 7th September, complains that letters are distributed a considerable time after delivery, and there should be two sets of peons for the purpose, the Postmaster does not seem to take any notice of postal complaints, the stamp-vendor in the Post office is very rude in his behaviour towards the public, the public have to stay much longer than is necessary when they go to the post office on business matters and the Postmaster at Moradabad has no managing capacity though he is experienced.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

The Muhammadan mission to Japan.

AL BASHIR,
4th September, 1906.

78. Al Bashir (Etawah), of 4th September, says that much good cannot be expected to result from the mission of the Muhammadan preachers in Japan, as long as they are fettered by narrow prejudiced views on religion. The propagation of Islam in India will involve much less expense than in Japan. They are also opposed at every step by Arya missionaries, who are prepared to defeat them in Africa, America, Europe and elsewhere. The Árya Mitra (Agra) hopes that the Aryas will not brook the idea that a civilized country like Japan should accept the Muhammadan faith, and considers it necessary that the principles of the Vedic religion should be explained to the Mikado, who after this has been done is sure to see for himself the weakness of the teachings of the Koran. Al Bashir says that it has been explained very clearly to the Aryas that a religion like that of the Aryas that can attribute matter and spirit to God can never be called Unitarian. The editor takes exception to the language of the Arya Mitra as being calculated to injure the feelings of the Muhammadan community. The editor says that so far no definite arrangements have been made to send any Arya missionaries to Japan, and the Aryas seem to be at their wit's end how to accomplish the object. He advises them not to attempt such a thing simply because the Muhammadans have sent their religious leaders to Japan.

The Religious Conference of Japan.

DABDABA-I-SIKANDARI,
10th September, 1906.

79. The Dabdaba-i-Sikandari (Rampur), of 10th September, says that the Mikado has himself opened the Conference in Tokio, that the Muhammadan leaders of religion have been accorded a warm reception, and that the tracts presented by them have been translated into the Japanese for free distribution. The several Muhammadan Associations now in Japan have left each, a member in Tokio, while the rest have gone abroad to propagate Islam, and to see how far the Japanese are capable of accepting their faith.

The Musáfir (Agra), of 8th September proposes to send an Arya mission to Japan to inculcate Arya tenets, and to expose the weaknesses of the Muhammadan religion.

Religious fanaticism.

HINDOSTAN,
7th September, 1906.

80. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of 7th September, says that a Cawnpore correspondent writes on 30th ultimo :—A Hindu tailor of Mali-Mohal, Cawnpore, dreamt last night that the goddess Tapeshuri Devi appeared and demanded his tongue. On awakening this morning he calmly severed the greater portion of his tongue and took it and laid it before the divinity's image, in her temple at Putkapur.

The Arya faith and Islam.

MUSAFIR,
8th September, 1906.

81. The editor of the Musafir (Agra), of 8th September, while engaging in a controversy with the editor of the Ziya-ul-Islam, and referring to an article entitled "The influence of the Vedas" in that paper, exposes the weaknesses of the Muhammadan Faith in a manner objectionable to Muslims, and points out that the editor of the Ziya-ul Islam tries frequently to create a gulf between the Government and its subjects. The editor objects to certain passages in the article referred to in the Ziya-ul-Islam of 15th August, which are equally intemperate with those in the Musafir, as such freely abuses the religion and wounds the religious feelings of the other.

The Arya and Muhammadan newspapers.

HINDUSTANI,
12th September, 1906.

82. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of 12th September, deplores the unseemly assaults between certain Arya papers on the one hand and Muhammadan organs on the other. The editor says that such attacks are very degrading in the world of journalism, and should cease, as they are sure to widen the gulf between the two races.

Cow-killing in Sabathu.

UNION GAZETTE,
7th September, 1906.

83. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 7th September, gives the main facts of the Sabathu cow-killing incident as extracted from the Indian People (Allahabad), of 9th September, and the Rahbar (Moradabad) of 7th September, and expresses a hope that the authorities will in future respect public feeling and refrain from doing such things.

Cow-killing in Sabathu.

RAHBAR,
7th September, 1906.

84. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 7th September, says with reference to the cow-killing incident at Sabathu that the cow is looked upon even by our foreign rulers as an object of worship, and that the military officers at Sabathu have shown an utter disregard to public feeling in having thirty-six cows shot dead on the spot, in spite of the entreaties and protestations of the local Hindu community. The editor says that the insult was given in a cantonment station, and, had this happened at a place inhabited by the ignorant masses, streams of blood would have been seen flowing on the scene. He thinks that a mere warning for the future will not meet the requirements of the case, considers that the administration of justice at present is unsatisfactory, appeals to God, asking when we are to be relieved of this oppression, and beseeches Him to give our rulers sound sense and judgment.

OUDH AKHBAR,
12th September,
1906.

Cow-killing in Sabathu.

85. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of 12th September, says that the act of the military authorities was wilful and in utter disregard of Hindu feeling, and suggests that cow-killing should be interdicted by law in order to avoid future contretemps.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
9th September,
1906.

Slaughter of cows.

86. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 9th September, says that the incident at Sabathu in which a number of diseased cows were killed and burned within sight of a Hindu population was a tactical blunder of an inexcusable character, because no one can plead ignorance of Hindu feeling on the subject of cow-killing. But the military authorities are doing all they can to pacify the people and to assure them that the mistake will not be repeated. The outrage reported from Chunar appears to be more serious, for there a retired Irishman deliberately shot a cow which had strayed on to his land. A grosser or more wanton outrage cannot be conceived, and we are not at all surprised that the valiant cow-killer had to seek the protection of the police and the magistrate. The wonder is that he escaped with a whole skin. If an offence of this nature is condoned, the authorities will be to blame if the people take the law in their own hands, for the mild Hindu draws the line at an outrage to religious feeling. Offenders of this type should be sent to prison without the option of a fine.

The Bhárat Jiwan, (Benares), of 10th September, and the Mohini (Kanauj), of the 7th September, express the extreme regret and dissatisfaction of the public at the slaughter of the cows in front of a temple. The editor of the Bhárat Jiwan makes a reference to the Mutiny of 1857 caused by the public impression that the cartridges were greased with the fat of cows and swine.

CITIZEN,
10th September,
1906.

Kine slaughter and Hindu feeling.

87. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 10th September, says :—On Wednesday the 29th ultimo, the entire Hindu population of Sabathu (Punjab) and the adjoining villages were celebrating, with great rejoicing the annual sacred festival of Googa on Lower Parade Ground, when a report spread from mouth to mouth that 36 innocent cows were collected at the Incinerator to be killed and burnt therein. The Incinerator is kept outside the bazar on the way to the Hindu temple, and only a few yards distant from the place where the festival is annually held. At first the people would not believe that the authorities had sunk so low as to inflict such indescribable pain on them, and of all the days, on a sacred Hindu Feast day. But the report turned out to be only too true. Another few minutes, and the whole atmosphere was charged with the powerful, unbearable smell of burning cow-hide. The poor dumb creatures were first killed, then butchered into small pieces, and finally flung into the Incinerator, there to be burnt and reduced to ashes. A profound depressing gloom was soon cast over the countenances of the erstwhile joyous throng. The whole Hindu population then waited in a body on Captain Burges, the Assistant Cantonment Magistrate. They undertook to buy the condemned cows at any price, and keep them segregated outside Cantonment limits, and feed them and save them if possible. Captain Burges, who was kind and courteous to the petitioners, said he was helpless in the matter, as it was due to the orders of the higher authorities. However, after 14 cows had been destroyed, he stopped the work of further destruction, and forwarded the petition to the Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General at Kasauli for orders. Several respectable Hindus went to Kasauli with the letter do deliver it personally. On arrival at Kasauli they danced attendance on the Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General the whole livelong night. While Rome burnt Nero fiddled—what did these high officers care for the tendermost feelings of a whole community? The Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General directed them to go and see the Officer Commanding the Brigade. That gentleman was also very polite, but could not see his way to save the cows. An officer was sent to discuss the affair with the Hindus. The officer decided not to kill the cows in the highly revolting fashion orginally decided upon, but instead to shoot them and bury them in pits. And this they carried out regardless of the cries and screams of the people, who again and again entreated them to deliver the cows to them and demand any price. Nothing was now left but black despair and hopelessness. Of course, we know that Major-General Walter Kitchener, the brother of the Commander-in-Chief, went to Sabathu from Simla when the grim tragedy had been already enacted and was past all remedy. He told the Hindus that the Military had committed a fault and that the like would never be repeated again. He made the astounding and incredible defence that the Military authorities were ignorant, when the Hindus had been telling them all along of their feelings!

Agra orphanage endowments.

JASUS,
7th September,
1906.

88. The Jásus (Agra), of 7th September, invites the attention of the district magistrate to the unsatisfactory management of the Agra Orphanage endowment. The managers appear to be quite unmindful of the needs of the times, and have no managing capacity. The editor calls upon the managers to publish the magazine monthly, and to lay the accounts of the orphanage before the public and invokes the aid of other Muhammadan organs in the matter.

CITIZEN,
17th September,
1906.

Flogging and hanging in Egypt under British supervision.

1. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 17th September, says that the young Egyptian party have given an account of the flogging and hanging of the Egyptian fellaheen at Denshawai, which after detailing the arrangements goes to show that the son of Hasan Mahfooz, one of the condemned to death, asked to see his father before hanging, but was not allowed by Mr. Machell who superintended the proceedings. One of the men condemned to death was 65 years old, and against him no charge was proved but that he said to Major P. " Don't shoot near the village." He was tied up to the gallows with his face turned to the village. His wife, sons and relations were on the roofs of his very near house and as soon as they saw him ascending cried bitterly. A few seconds later the man was hung gazing towards his lovely house and family. Then the first condemned to flogging was taken out while his comrade was still hung on the gallows. He was flogged on his bare skin each lash leaving blood clotted in its place. The man cried loudly and called out for rescue. The villagers on the roofs were seeing the execution absolutely affected by the awful sight of execution performed by members of the civilized world. Amongst the spectators, Europeans wept and showed a kindly feeling towards those unfortunate creatures.

As soon as the man received the twentieth lash he lost his senses and his whole body was set in convulsions. After receiving the fiftieth he was borne to his comrades in the tent to see him. Every condemned to death remained hung on the gallows until two condemned to flogging were lashed after seeing him. Thus the execution was carried out in such a barbarous way which no creature in the civilized days ever sighted. After the execution lamentations were the fate of the mourning villagers.

General disappointment prevailed amongst all the enlightened class of Egyptians when they came to know that the judgment was based upon the idea of fanaticism and obstinacy of the nation. Imagine then what effects have had the sentence and execution upon the minds of those who believe that the incident was only a matter of misunderstanding on the part of both parties.

The man Machell who superintended the hangings and floggings, and refused to permit the son of a condemned man to speak with his father before his execution, has since been created a Knight on the recommendation of the Liberal Prime Minister.

OUDH AKHBAR,
20th September,
1906.

The abolition of the quarantine rules.

2. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 20th September, says that the Muhammadans are highly gratified at the abolition of the quarantine rules.

JASUS,
14th September,
1906.

The Jásus (Agra), of 14th September, likewise expresses public satisfaction, and the editor says that our kind and beneficent Government is always prepared to make just concessions when a loyal representation is made.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
16th September,
1906.

The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of 16th September, expresses similar views.

(b).—Home.

OUDH AKHBAR,
20th September,
1906.

The present situation of India.

3. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 20th September, says that the political situation in Bengal is becoming more and more alarming every day, the speeches of the leaders of Bengal and the boycott are calculated to spread disaffection, and repressive measures are necessary.

UNION GAZETTE,
14th September,
1906.

The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 14th September, says that much of the prevailing discontent is due to publications in the Anglo-Indian Press, and that the Golden Bengal is the outcome of the fertile imagination of the Englishman. The editor points out that, as Sir Henry Cotton says, so long as Indians are forthcoming to give information of what is going on in the country, the British Government in India need not apprehend any danger.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th September,
1906.

A correspondent in the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 16th September, says that the formation of associations like the Golden Bengal is a clear indication of impending disaster in Bengal.

Another correspondent in this paper complains of the undue severity of the present laws which are calculated to promote the interests of Government at public expense. He thinks that Western civilization and education have annihilated indigenous arts and industries; but now the country is undergoing a revolution for the better, and the people realize their situation, and therefore demand the rights and privileges promised to them in the Proclamation of 1857. Much stress is laid also on the suggestions made by Mr. Morley in his recent Budget speech regarding the treatment of Indians, which the correspondent thinks are calculated to lead to moral, political and commercial advancement.

UNION GAZETTE,
14th September,
1906.

The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 14th September, says that the Indians are fully qualified to profit by self-Government, and that Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman, who has recently held out hopes of conferring the boon on Indians when they are fit to make a proper use of it, need not delay any longer.

ANAND KADIMBINI,
June, 1906.

The guiding principle in the administration of India.

4. The editor of the Anand Kádimbini (Mirzapur), for June, received on 18th September, refers to the views of His Highness the Prince of Wales and Mr. Morley, the Secretary of State, regarding the administration of India and the regard due to the feelings of the Indians, and says that practical effect should be given to these views so as to engender goodwill towards Government.

BHARAT JIWAN,
17th September,
1906.

Representative form of Government in India.

5. The editor of the Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of 17th September, says that Persia and China have adopted the Representative form of Government, and asks when Government will confer this boon on the Indians.

HINDUSTANI,
19th September,
1906.

Self-Government.

6. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of 19th September, expresses its disapprobation of the views expressed in the Times on the subject of self-government, except in so far that local self-government is the first step in this direction. The editor thinks that it is calculated to bring about very beneficial results, and has great advantages over government by the Collector's nominees exclusively. He dissents from the editor of the Times who charges Indians with lack of energy, reflection and administrative powers, and says that the Indians look upon self-government as the means of the salvation of their country. In conclusion he points out that it is quite time that they should be allowed a share in the administration of the country.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW,
August, 1906.

The Indian Press—its educational function.

7. A correspondent in the Hindustan Review (Allahabad), for August, says that India is as ignorant of herself as any other country can be of her. The Bengali is as much ignorant of the social life of the Punjabi as the latter of the former. The Indian Press can no doubt considerably hasten the enlightenment of the people; but as it stands now, it is too feeble to be of any service, and in this respect it differs materially from the European Press, which dispels popular ignorance and acquires a strong hold over the minds of the populace. The editors of the Indian Press are neglected as if they were a class of insignificant men. Without adequate support and power and prestige, the Indian Press drags on its existence as an institution simply engaged in catering provincial news and the grievances of its own personality.

Journalism in India is not a lucrative profession and those who conduct it live a hand-to-mouth existence. They are not, like their English colleagues, helped by a staff of well-paid assistants, but mainly depend on amateur contributions. Circumstanced as he is, an Indian journalist, before embracing his calling, passes through no noviciate, and as such neither continues a settled policy nor preserves any traditions. Thus the ignorance of its conductors deprives the Indian Press of all its usefulness and makes it only a vehicle of local and personal grievances. And there is little hope for the enlightenment of the Indian masses by the Press as long as its personnel and its ways do not much improve.

* * * * * * * *

To acquire a proper place in the estimation of the Indian populace and their rulers, the Indian Press should influence the masses by keeping them properly informed of all that is taking place in the country. Acting on such a principle would not only make the Indian journalists a class of influential men, but also enable them to acquire a hold in the country that would help them greatly at times when occasions arise for fighting political battles. With a large following and more power the Indian Press would soon acquire the real dignity of the fourth estate such as the English possess in England to-day.

The Hindus and Muhammadans of India.

8. The Kanauj Punch, of 15th September, says that no amount of eloquent and heart-stirring speeches will bring about a union between Hindus and Muhammadans unless they have common political and educational interests, and suggests that if they cannot combine in political matters they should do so at least in matters of education and have one common University between them.

UNION GAZETTE,
14th September, 1906.

The relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

9. The editor of the Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 14th September, says that the Muhammadans are now beginning to feel the necessity of taking a share in Indian politics, and it is therefore necessary for the leaders of the two communities to meet and ascertain how far co-operation is practicable. He notes that Mr. Amir Ali thinks that the two communities have many common interests and are agreed to work in concert on the few points of difference between them. The leaders should, in no way, allow themselves to be influenced by official opinion about them one way or the other when considering this question.

ZUL QARNAIN,
14th September, 1906.

The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of 14th September, says that co-operation with Hindus cannot lead to any good to Muhammadans, so the latter should not join the Congress, and should continue to have implicit faith in the beneficence of Government.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th September, 1906.

The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 16th September, says that the Hindus cannot have genuine sympathy when their very touch is looked upon as polluting, and takes exception to the attitude of newspapers whose tone is calculated to widen the gulf between the two communities.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
16th September, 1906.

The Anglo-Indian and Vernacular Press and the relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

10. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of 16th September, while referring to the vote of censure, passed at a meeting held in Gorakhpur under the presidency of a Muhammadan leader, on Anglo-Indian papers, particularly the Pioneer and the Englishman, which are calculated to excite ill-feeling and disaffection between Hindus and Muhammadans, says that the attitude of the vernacular press is no less to be regretted than that of Anglo-Indian papers in this respect. The editor notes that most of the Urdu papers in Upper India are owned and edited by Muhammadans, and suggests the formation of a committee of the proprietors of leading newspapers with a view to regulate the tone of the press and to maintain friendly relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
19th September, 1906.

The resolution passed by Manchester mill-owners in connection with the swadeshi movement.

11. The Nasim-i-Agra, of 19th September, says that the owners of mills and manufactories in Manchester have tried their best to move Government to set aside the partition of Bengal in consequence of the harm it has done to their trade, but have remained unsuccessful. They have, therefore, resolved upon excluding Indian students in future from schools imparting technical education in arts and industries. The editor condemns this resolution as very narrow-minded.

MUFID-I-AM,
16th September, 1906.

An appeal to Government for the protection of Muhammadan rights.

12. The Mufid-i-Ám (Agra), of 16th September, says that the turn that events have recently taken in Bengal shows that Sir Saiyad was fully justified in keeping aloof from the Congress movement. The Hindu press is openly opposing Muhammadan interests, and the Muhammadans have not the means to make a proper representation of their case to Government. The Hindus have succeeded in inducing the Secretary of State to consider the question regarding the number of Indian members in the Viceroy's Council, and a committee has already been formed and entrusted with the work. The expansion of the council will surely be injurious to Muhammadan interests unless the number of Hindu and Muhammadan members is equalized, as the number of the voting Hindu public is twice as much as that of the Muhammadans. A deputation of leading Muhammadans therefore has undertaken to memorialize the Government of India on the subject.

AL BASHIR,
18th September,
1906.

Muhammadan deputation to the Viceroy.

13. Al Bashir (Etawah), of 18th September, says that it has been resolved at a representative meeting of Muhammadans held at Allahabad to send a deputation to and memorialize the Viceroy to take measures calculated to protect the interests of Muhammadans.

HINDUSTANI,
19th September,
1906.

The proposed Muhammadan deputation to the Viceroy.

14. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of 19th September, says that the leading Muhammadans of Lucknow met in the Kaisarbagh baradari on Wednesday last, and decided upon submitting a memorial to the Viceroy requesting that the Muhammadans should have the exclusive right to elect their own members for the Municipal Boards and Legislative Councils, and that the number of their members should be fixed with due regard to the proportion of the voting Muhammadan public of India. A similar request is made with regard to the distribution of appointments.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
19th September,
1906.

The Indian Union Association Meerut.

15. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut) of 16th September, announces that the Indian Union Association has been established in Meerut with a view to foster a sense of patriotism in Indians, and thereby to cement the relations between the several communities inhabiting India, so as to weld them into one homogeneous whole irrespective of all considerations of creed or colour ; to improve indigenous arts, industries and commerce ; and to disseminate scientific and technical education all over India.

This association will have nothing to do with political matters or religious discussions.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
16th September,
1906.

Muhammadan delegates for the ensuing congress.

16. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of 16th September, says that our every day experience shows that there is not a dearth of educated and enlightened Muhammadans, who can take a share in the proceedings of the Indian National Congress, and it is to be regretted that certain true reformers and ardent and well-meaning Indian leaders represent the proceedings of the Congress in a light which discourages Muhammadans from joining the movement. The Congress has been working steadily for the last twenty-one years, and the editor is of opinion that a long list of names of Muhammadans amongst its advocates is not essential to make it a successful organ. It is no doubt true that the entire separation of Muhammadans from the congress will produce injurious results, but it cannot be fatal to its interests, and the congress will carry on its work like a man afflicted with a withered hand. The editor further says that, be the motives of the leaders of the Congress what they may, in securing 350 Muhammadan delegates for the ensuing Congress, they cannot but be said to be actuated by the best of motives, and by sympathy towards the Muhammadans.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
16th September,
1906.

Our representative in the Viceroy's Council.

17. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 16th September, says that the main difficulty arose from the attitude assumed by the member who had been thrice elected to represent these provinces and who was not yet satiated. As it was the first object of some of the other members to keep him out, who got in became quite a secondary consideration. When there was a tie between Rai Sri Ram and Rai Nihal Chand, somehow there came about a tacit understanding that neither of them was to get another chance, though we fail to see how both came to be placed in the same category. Rai Sri Ram would have declined to vote for Rai Nihal Chand, as he did in the case of Pandit Madan Mohan. Munshi Madho Lal was evidently thought of as offering a way out of the difficulty. It must be remembered that he did not decline to vote for Pandit Madan Mohan and was quite willing to stand aloof for him. The editor hopes that the time is not far when our best men will cease to give a thought to a seat in the Legislative Council, for really it is not worth while.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

SITARA-I-HIND,
12th September,
1906.

The visit of the Amir of Kabul to India.

18. The Sitára-i-Hind (Moradabad), of 12th September, says that the visit of the Amir is calculated to strengthen the friendly relations between Kabul and India, and that certain urgent matters will be discussed on the occasion, and the best possible advice will be given to the Amir.

OUDH AKHBAR,
22nd September,
1906.

The visit of the Amir of Kabul.

19. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 22nd September, says that since the Amir is taking a purely pleasure trip to India, it is highly desirable that he should see important cities of historical renown, and suggests that he may renounce his pension in favour of the descendants of the Kings of Delhi and Oudh who stand much in need of pecuniary assistance.

EXPRESS,
13th September,
1906.

Progress and the Afghans.

20. The Express (Lucknow), of 13th September, says that the Russo-Japanese War has enabled the nations of the East to realise their great past, their latent capabilities and their power to resist European aggression. People of the East and students of foreign politics alike are deeply interested in the fate in store for different Oriental countries, and among these not the least important is the case of Afghanistan. It is not necessary to speak of the natural barriers to aggression which Afghanistan possesses in an eminent degree. They were overcome in the past and they can be overcome in the future. The preparedness of the country for war and its being self-contained in the matter of manufacturing the necessary munitions of war adds to its strength. But it is the character of the people which will ultimately decide their fate.

Dr. Abdul Ghani, Principal of the local Islamia College, who has had special opportunities of studying the national traits of the Afghan character, says that judging the Pathans by the criteria which have led to the present greatness of the Japanese, he does not find them wanting in those attributes. The late Amir Abdul Rahman took care to discourage their conceit that they are superior to all other races in every respect. Education will destroy it altogether, and they are amenable to the influences of education. They are not so hide-bound as not to accept what is to their own advantage, though they cannot be expected to renounce their religion and the excellent customs which give them an individuality of their own. Not only the Afghan courtiers, but the masses have renounced their own and adopted the European mode of dress which facilitates the despatch of business. Though not easily open to conviction, they are not utterly obstinate, and are eminently fitted to hold their own in the competition between nation and nation. The passion for inquiry is intense among them, and though not most conspicuous in enterprise, they are more enterprising than the people of India, and manage to carry on their business without being acquainted with the languages and customs of the lands where they carry their wares.

Thus it will be seen that the natives of Afghanistan possess the potentialities of a great nation. They have a ruler who encourages these tendencies. What is required of them is to take rapid strides along the path of progress.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

JASUS,
14th September,
1906.

Jaipur.

21. The editor of the Jásus (Agra), of 14th September, expresses a hope that the information about the Maharaja of Jaipur giving one lakh of rupees to aid the Bengal National University is untrue as it is calculated to make Government suspicious about him. He also points out that the printed list of holidays received from Jaipur shows a tendency towards discouraging Urdu and that Muhammadan holidays have been curtailed considerably. The editor has also reason to complain against the influence of the theatrical performances on the people of Jaipur.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
16th September,
1906.

Rampur.

22. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of 16th September, says that the circumstances under which Mansab Ali was taken under arrest are not sufficiently justifiable. It is very difficult to unravel the mystery of his death. It is alleged that His Highness the Nawab was not at all satisfied with the appointment of Maulvi Abdul Ghafur as Minister owing to his friendly relations with the late General Azim-uddin Khan, and that Mansab Ali's death was encompassed owing to his relations with Maulvi Abdul Ghafur and the late General. It was also feared that Mansab Ali and the Minister would interest themselves in Zia-ul-haq, and it was on this account that the Minister had to resign, and a charge of corruption was brought against Mansab Ali, and that one of his letters to a near relative points to his helplessness and to his anticipated death. The editor suggests that, in case government by a council is decided upon, Nawab Manjhu Sahib who has received Western education and is well versed in the problems of the day should be appointed vice-president.

KANAUJ PUNDH,
15th September,
1906.

Titles conferred by Native Chiefs and Princes.

23. The Kanauj Punch, of 15th September, referring to the omission of titles conferred by the Nizam at the time of the introduction of some of his courtiers to His Highness the Prince of Wales says that it is a slight to the courtiers concerned and to the Nizam if the British Government refuses to recognize those titles.

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

HINDOSTHAN,
12th September,
1906.

English justice.

24. A correspondent in the English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of 12th September, says that English judges and magistrates are the best judges in the world, but the critics who must find fault with Government officials, do not spare them whether they deserve praise or censure. They must look rather to their own beams than to the motes of Government officials. But, if the saying is true that there must be a black sheep in every flock, then Indian Government officials would be found to possess more than one compared with European officials.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
13th September,
1906.

The Murree assault case.

25. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 13th September, says that the case in which Sardar Sewa Ram Singh, a pleader of Rawalpindi, charged Lieutenant Grenfell with unprovoked assault, has been compromised, and the public of Rawalpindi is said to be very indignant at this termination of the case. A compromise in a simple case of assault is not to be regretted in itself, but this case presented peculiarly aggravating features. It was a cowardly assault aggravated by every element of brutality. The complainant was severely assaulted, grossly abused, compelled to touch the feet of the accused, who was boasting all the time that he was Badshah ka dost. If Sardar Sewa Ram Singh could have given a sound hammering to Lieutenant Grenfell it would have been the best punishment under the circumstances, but he was either dazed or overpowered. When the matter went to court the accused offered an unconditional apology. This the complainant refused to accept, and now it is stated the matter has been compromised at the private residence of the Deputy Commissioner. This is what gives an ugly look to the affair. It would have been better and more generous if the complainant had accepted the apology tendered in open court. Failing that, he should have allowed the case to take its course. We shall never hear the end of these miserable cases until Indian gentlemen are able to take care of themselves. When a Punjabi, and a Sikh to boot, is assaulted in such a degrading manner, and then agrees to a humiliating compromise what are we to expect of poor ignorant people ? Sardar Sewa Ram Singh might not have been Lieutenant Grenfell's equal in strength, but he might have broken the Lieutenant's head with a stone, or given him a lesson in wrestling. Why, in Lahore we have seen a common bhishti stand up to two soldiers and throw them one after the other in such beautiful style that the gallant soldiers were bawling for the police in a couple of minutes. Cannot every Punjabi learn a few tricks of Punjabi kushti ? That would be sufficient to punish braggarts of the Grenfell type.

CITIZEN,
17th September,
1906.

An outrage at Castle Rock.

26. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 17th September, says that quite a sensation has been caused at Castle Rock by a case of rape committed by a European driver Henwood in the employ of the Southern Mahratta Railway who is between 30 and 35 years old, on a little girl of only 8 or 9 years age, the daughter of a native Christian fireman also in the employ of the railway company. Two days after the occurrence when the girl began to cry with pain the father elicited from her what had happened, but the discovery of his beastly action having reached the ears of the driver, he left Castle Rock immediately and went into Portuguese territory. The father of the girl made a complaint to the railway police, and the Chief constable having wired to the Portuguese Police at Collem and Sanvordem in Goa, the accused was taken under arrest and is now in the custody of the Goa police. The Extradition Act is said to have been made applicable to Goa, and there seems no difficulty in the way of the Bengal Railway Police obtaining the custody of the accused. The poor victim is now in civil hospital at Belgaum and every sympathy is being expressed for her and her father. The whole matter is in the hands of the police now, and the case will probably come on in a day or two before the Cantonment Magistrate at Belgaum.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
15th September, 1906.

Whipping.

27. The Cawnpore Gazette, of 15th September, deprecates whipping as a punishment in India, and characterizes it as brutal and barbarous. The editor says that it should not be overlooked considering that cruelty to animals has formed the subject of separate enactment.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
16th September, 1906.

Promotions in the Benares Judgeship.

28. A correspondent in the Áwáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of 16th September, says that the time-honoured practice of giving promotions by gradation has been utterly disregarded under Mr. Patterson the present Judge of Benares, and applications for filling vacancies are invited by means of advertisements in papers. The editor suggests that promotion should go by gradation, and that the persons promoted should be reverted if found unfit for the proper discharge of the duties of the posts to which they are promoted.

OUDH AKHBAR,
18th September, 1906.

The location of the High Court.

29. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 18th September, says that the question of the transfer of the High Court was purely executive, and one that could be decided between the public and the Government without reference to Judicial authorities. The document containing the signatures obtained and presented to Government with the memorial, was a clear indication of public opinion and showed that the preponderance was in favour of Lucknow, and it was quite unnecessary to put off the question for future consideration. The signatories belong to the Commissionerships of Agra, Rohilkhand, Bundelkhand, Meerut and Gorakhpur, and they are of opinion that Lucknow occupies a central position, and the administration of justice will be considerably facilitated by locating the High Court there. Besides the fulfilment of the wish of the Chief Justice regarding the appointment of an additional judge, could likewise be secured thereby, without the Government incurring any extra expenditure on this account. Then, apart from the grounds set forth in their memorial by the talukdars, the promise held out to the talukdárs of Oudh, and renewed by subsequent repetitions on various occasions that the Judicial Commissioner's court was to remain at Lucknow, has to be taken into consideration. It has also to be borne in mind that Government is bound by no such promises to the people of Allahabad. Taking all this into consideration the transfer of the High Court to Lucknow should not be postponed merely because a number of interested owners of house property are opposed to this view.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
16th September, 1906.

Honorary Magistrates.

30. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 16th September, says that Government is very careful in appointing persons to posts carrying any remuneration with it, and satisfies itself that the candidate possesses certain educational qualifications, that he bears a good moral character and is not a resident of the same district; and when the particular post is that of a Judicial or Executive officer still greater care is taken about the merits and capacity of the candidate. He is not only requried to hold a high university degree, but has also to pass certain examinations in law, and if appointed, is not allowed to remain in his own native place. And yet these are the very rules which in the appointment of honorary magistrates are more respected in the breach than in the observance. That a man who far from being able to write out a judgment cannot even take down depositions in his own handwriting, who far from being able to sift the evidence on the record is not even able to read it, who far from being well acquainted with the criminal law of the country, does not even know the names of the Acts that come under that head, that such a man should at all be able to deal out justice is what surpasses comprehension. The editor suggests that greater judgment should be exercised in their selection, and that it is a blunder of a very serious nature to load a man with all the powers of a magistrate without pumping in him a little spirit of discretion. He says that with some of our magistrates being able to sign their names is their only educational qualification, and some others of our magistrates have not had time to spend on their education, and that if in the face of all these facts the Government when appointing honorary magistrates intentionally deviate from the right path it is a mistake which if committed by another person they would not pardon. He points out that along with literate and enlightened magistrates there are also illiterate and ignorant magistrates, and that the latter should no longer be allowed to send people to jail.

HINDUSTANI,
19th September,
1906.

Complaint regarding heavy revenue work in courts of Deputy Collectors.

31. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of 19th September, referring to the complaint of the Zul Qarnain (Budaun), regarding heavy revenue work in the courts of Deputy collectors, says that Government should direct its attention in this direction, and suggests the desirability of increasing the number of Deputy Collectors when there is considerable increase in the income from court fees. The Deputy Collectors are so overworked since the amendment of the Rent Act that they are obliged to decide cases after considerable delay and still their decisions are not sound and to the satisfaction of the parties.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
15th September,
1906.

Police-high handedness.

32. The Cawnpore Gazette, of 15th September, says that much evil results from the vast powers conferred on the police, and though justice is eventually done, yet there is nothing to redress the wrongs that the public suffer at the hands of the police, who do not hesitate to send up innocent persons for trial even in heinous cases. Reference is then made to a case of murder in Kachar in which a number of innocent persons were sent up for trial though they were eventually acquitted by the High Court.

ADVOCATE,
16th September,
1906.

The alleged police zulum at Benares.

33. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of 16th September, says with reference to a letter published recently in the columns of the Advocate and contributed by one A. B. C., that the facts put in his letter will clearly prove the erroneous views of that correspondent. Over a week prior to the lunar eclipse an overseer was appointed by the local municipality to minutely examine the condition of each ghat from Assi to Varana. It was on the statement put forward by the overseer that ghat arrangements were made. It was none of the seeking of the Police to interfere in a case which was in the hands of the Municipal overseer directed by the Chairman, who is the District Magistrate. The correspondent is surely not aware that for the purpose of strict supervision along the river side, Deputy Magistrates were posted, one for each of the five ghats. The District Magistrate was personally present at Manikarnika ghat on account of there being a great rush of people there. So that there was no use of lashes as complained of. Indeed the ghatiyas were not allowed to sit on the ghats in the way they do, to prevent their occupying a large space which was freely used by the bathers. They were present on the ghats allowed for bathing with only a small space to carry on their religious mission. Thus the bathers were not precluded from giving the ghatiyas dakshina as reported.

Police Zulum has become a by-word amongst us. But that is no reason at all why they should be oppressive in a case in which there was no room for oppression.

In the Bramley-regime things were carried on in a neat and a smooth manner, so much so that he could win the entire confidence and popularity of the people. How can the police here be rotten to the very core in the interval of a month and a half? He referred to Mr. Bramley's deputation to the Lower Provinces.

[The editor adds that their own correspondent writes a letter in support of these views].

MUFID-I-AM,
16th September,
1906.

Police Reform.

34. The Mufid-i-Ám (Agra), of 16th September, says that the European officers have received their promotions according to the scale proposed by the Police Commission, but native officers in the lower grades have not yet been attended to. The horse allowance of Rs. 10 per mensem allotted to Sub-Inspectors is quite insufficient, and the editor suggests that it should be increased to Rs. 15. Under the present rules Sub-Inspectors cannot hope to become Inspectors for years. The editor is of opinion that the rules regulating promotions to Tahsildarships should be adopted in their case also.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
15th September,
1906.

False weights and measures in Agra.

35. The Nasim-i-Agra, of 15th September, complains of the use of false weights and measures all over Agra, except the cantonments, and suggests that the offence is within the cognizance of police.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
15th September,
1906.

Thefts in Agra.

36. The Nasim-i-Agra, of 15th September, reports an increase in thefts, and suggests an increase in the sanctioned scale of the force to ensure better watch and ward.

ADVOCATE,
16th September,
1906.

Highway robbery and other heinous crime on the road between the Hindola ka Naka bridge and the Railway station at Charbagh, Lucknow.

37. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 16th September, while referring to a recent highway robbery on the road between the Hindola ka Naka bridge and the Railway station at Charbagh, points out that the road is very unsafe, that a number of cases of assault and dacoity were reported last year, and that two cases of highway robbery have been reported this year; and that the road between the bridge and railway is lonely and very badly lighted. The editor suggests that either a new police outpost should be established close to the octroi barrier, or the present post on Abbot Road be removed to the crossing to ensure the safety of the persons and property of wayfarers and that in the meanwhile a few of the mounted police be appointed to patrol the road between 6 and 11 P. M.

The Municipal Board at Hapur in the Meerut district.

38. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 20th September, says that nine of the members of the municipal board at Hapur in the Meerut district have resigned their seats owing to the encouragement given by the District Magistrate to the stipendiary municipal secretary, whose attitude towards the members is very overbearing. He notes also in this connection that the Hapur police have sent up Pandit Basdeo, an ex-member and a very influential resident of the Hapur, municipality for trial under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code and the case is now before the District Magistrate. A list of five hundred witnesses for the defence has been filed. Pandit Basdeo was sent up under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code, three years back and was acquitted.

INDIAN STANDARD,
10th September,
1906.

A professorial example.

39. The Indian Standard (Allahabad), of 10th September, says with regret that no corner in India is free from the unenglish behaviour of those Europeans, who hold the responsible duties of looking to the welfare of the people put under their charge. The other day we were quite astonished to see that Mr. J. J. Durack, the physics professor of the Muir Central College, struck a third year student violently on the forehead with a piece of chalk. Is it not a matter of regret to find such behaviour in those who form the character of the students? Our worthy professor should have realised that college students are no more school boys and that such treatment though excusable in a village pedagogue is not so in a college professor. We are sorry that the boy did not retaliate nor did he report the matter to our most conscientious and worthy principal, which would have then at once rectified such a gross error on the part of one of his most able subordinates. This is indeed a disgrace. The boy has done well and behaved admirably. The tables are turned we see. The Christian professor should henceforth follow this noble and Christ-like example of forgiveness set by a so-called pagan pupil.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
12th September,
1906.

Increase of Inspectors of Schools.

40. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, of 12th September, is quite at one with the views expressed by Mr. De la Fosse regarding the inefficient inspection of the teaching imparted at schools and colleges in Sanskrit and Arabic, and now that the question of increasing the number of inspecting officers is under consideration the editor suggests the desirability of appointing men who can do justice to the subjects irrespective of all considerations of creed or colour.

The new Principal of the Muir Central College.

41. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 17th September, says that India protests against the appointment of a junior officer to the Principalship of the Muir Central College, at Allahabad, in supersession of the superior claims of Mr. Homersham Cox and the supersession of Mr. Prothero by a junior officer in connection with the Principalship of the Presidency College in Calcutta. It is hinted that Mr. Prothero was cut out of the Principalship as he was suspected of "pro-native" tendencies. We wonder if no information has yet reached our contemporary as to the appointment of Mr. De la Fosse as Director of Public Instruction for the United Provinces.

Protest against extensions to Babu Basdeo Sahai, Headmaster, District School, Farrukhabad.

42. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 17th September, says as follows on the subject:—Considerably to our surprise and regret we learn Babu Basdeo Sahai, Headmaster, District School, Farrukhabad, has submitted a fresh application for further extension of his period of service. We are aware that till a subordinate officer of the Education Department attains to the age of 60, it rests with the Director to grant him any number of extensions. But considering how hard the lot of a Headmaster is, what great risk and responsibility his office carries, and how remote the chance is of his enjoying his pension for any great length of time after he has been once entitled to it, we venture to suggest to Babu Basdeo Sahai the advisability of retiring on the earliest possible date. We yield to none in our appreciation of the service rendered to the cause of education by Babu Basdeo for a period extending for upwards of a quarter of a century, but we cannot have any patience with him if he will attempt making a parody of the song that the brook sings: "Men may come and men may go, but I go on for ever." As much in the interest of the department as in the interest of the officer concerned, we hope Mr. Lewis will not prove too good, too kind, and, we add, too weak to come to a proper decision in the matter.

CITIZEN,

Lewis Memorial Fund.

43. A correspondent in the Citizen (Allahabad), of 17th September, says that the approaching retirement of Mr. T. C. Lewis will no doubt be regretted by all sections of the people throughout these provinces, especially by the educational officers and the public taking interest in matters educational. He speaks very highly of his continued and strenuous efforts during his tenure of office over a period of twelve years, for annually increasing budget grants for the sole purpose of spreading and improving the quality of education in these provinces, no less than for enhancing the pay and prospects of the educational staff, and informs the public that the names of certain gentlemen have been proposed by the Lewis Memorial Fund Committee to be sent to different places with a view to receive subscriptions and grant receipts. He concludes with remarking that the matter was duly brought to the notice of Mr. Lewis and had his approval; and that he will first of all be requested to make any suggestions of his own, and then the scheme of the committee will be considered which it will be premature to do now without knowing the amount at its disposal.

Education amongst Muhammadans.

44. The Kanauj Punch, of 15th September, quotes references from the last census report of Bengal and points out that the proportion of school-going population amongst the Hindus is much higher than that of Muhammadans, which leads to the conclusion that the Muhammadans are not yet bestowing sufficient attention on the education of their children. The editor suggests that the Government of India should take the education of Muhammadans in its own hands.

AL BASHIR,
18th September,
1906.

The proportion of Hindus and Muhammadans in the Provincial Educational Department.

45. A correspondent in Al Bashir (Etawah), of 18th September, points out that religious and racial prejudices have considerably widened the gulf between the Hindus and Muhammadans of the present day though the relations between their ancestors were of a very friendly nature. He points out that the lot of the Muhammadans in the Educational Department is very unfortunate, and that the Hindus hold a very large number of appointments, that they are in fact monopolising the Department.

AL BASHIR,
18th September, 1906.

School for training midwives.

46. A correspondent in Al Bashir (Etawah), of 18th September, says that Hakim Hafiz Muhammad Ajmal of Delhi has undertaken to open a class for training Indian midwives in his Madrasa Tibia and suggests that the Indian public should give the movement every possible encouragement.

UNION GAZETTE,
19th September, 1906.

Sale of refreshments in schools.

47. The editor of the Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 19th September, suggests that the headmasters of schools should be made responsible for seeing that the articles of food supplied within the school compound are wholesome.

OUDH AKHBAR,
20th September, 1906.

Celibacy among students.

48. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 20th September, says, with reference to Mrs. Besant's remarks about celibacy in schools and colleges until students arrive at a certain age, that success in this direction will be a grand achievement and will lead to great beneficial results.

CITIZEN,
17th September, 1906.

Inconveniences to the Boarders of the Government High School, Saharanpur.

49. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 17th September, says :—A correspondent writing from Saharanpur under date 12th September 1906, brings to our notice the inconveniences that the Boarders of the Government High School suffer under the superintendence of the headmaster. The same correspondent mentions a painful incident in which a teacher of this school was concerned. The teacher has been forced to resign. The Director should enquire into the affairs of the school.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
16th September, 1906.

Proposed scholarships for Military and Commercial training in England.

50. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of 16th September, says, with reference to the proposal of the Director of Public Instruction of Bengal to offer a number of scholarships to students going to England for military and commercial training, that the proposal has received the support of the Chamber of Commerce of Bengal, and it is suggested that the scholarships should be given by competitive examination. The editor says that India will make considerable progress in a few years' time if these scholarships are sanctioned.

COLONEL,
8th September, 1906.

Famine in Eastern Bengal.

51. The Colonel (Moradabad), of 8th September, says, with reference to the famine in Eastern Bengal that the people are actually starving to death in the 24-Parganas and in Dacca and relates a heart-rending story of the death of one Maiman Singh and his wife. The editor says that teachers in Calcutta had raised some subscriptions for the famine-stricken people, but were told by Government that they should not interest themselves in such matters on pain of incurring displeasure. The editor thinks that the officers whose neglect of duty is leading to the death of the people will be responsible to God for the loss of life incurred.

ADVOCATE,
13th September, 1906.

The poverty problem in India.

52. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 13th September, says, with reference to the correspondence on the subject contributed by Mr. Hyndman, Mr. Morison and Mr. MacMinn in the Times that with all the advantages which British rule has conferred on India, the economic condition of the people has become less able to withstand scarcity, that the prices of food are constantly rising, and that, even in years of plenty, the mass of the people find it difficult to support themselves and their families with all their resources; they are physically deteriorating and cannot stand the rigours of ordinary ailments. The editor appeals to Mr. MacMinn's personal experience, and says that the figures of Sir Wiliam Hunter and Mr. Digby may be controvertible, but how can the rise in prices be explained? The people cannot grow physically strong when their cattle die like flies on the approach of famine. A vegetarian people mostly depending on ghi and milk cannot maintain their strength with ghi selling almost all the year round at Rs. 40 a maund and milk at 8 seers a rupee. The nice explanations offered for the decrease of horned cattle do not bring food to the people. Both the middle and the poorer classes are passing their days from year's end to year's end with gnawing in their stomachs : and what wonder if they ascribe it to the system of the Government by which the country is ruled. The editor further says that Mr. Morison who has long been in this country might have seen signs of prosperity round him at Aligarh, but the mass of the Muhammadans are as loud in complaining of hard times as the Hindus are, and none of them would for a moment believe in the accuracy of any figures produced to prove their prosperity till such time as they do not see plenty inside their doors, and as long as they have to undergo physical sufferings even in years of so-called prosperity. People can understand that in years of drought no Government can prevent scarcity or save them from suffering, but they cannot understand why the scarcity should continue in days of sufficient rainfall and bumper crops. It may be unjust and unfair to connect the plague mortality with poverty: but who can deny the indirect connection between the two. It is every day experience that those people who are physically strong are better able to fight the plague, and it is the poorer people who fall an easy prey to the fell disease, which as soon as it assumes an epidemic form, makes no distinction between the rich and the poor. The problem cannot be disposed of in the manner in which Mr. Morison and Mr. MacMinn have tried to disprove it. It requires inquiry and we think the liberal Government cannot better discharge its responsibilities towards the people of India than by accepting the suggestions of Mr. E. S. Beesly and ordering a thorough and searching inquiry into the causes which have led to the present deplorable condition of the masses of the people. Small tracts in every province can be selected and inquiry conducted without causing any disturbance in the smooth working of the wheel of administration of the country.

RAHBAR,
14th September,
1906.

The Strachey Famine fund.

53. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 14th September, says that a famine fund was collected by Sir John Strachey on the understanding that it was to be spent on relieving all persons suffering from famine and that no further collections will be made on realization of a certain sum. The editor says that the money was improperly spent on other purposes, and even its existence has now been denied. It is thus that the representatives of Government are losing the confidence of the people who do not hold Government so dear as they did when our rulers were true to their promises.

ARYA MITRA,
16th September,
1906.

Agricultural Banks in India.

54. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of 16th September says, with reference to the establishment of the proposed co-operative agricultural banks, that they cannot conduce materially to the public welfare while the people have to pay heavy taxes and exorbitant interest. The editor thinks that these are calculated to ruin indigenous trade and to help foreigners and suggests that taxes should be paid in kind. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares) of 17th September, exhorts the local public to start a co-operative bank.

The maltreatment of Lala Sita Ram of Amritsar by a European.

55. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 13th September, says:—Foolish forbearance is the most appropriate term which the Bengalee applies to the tearful silence with which Lala Sita Ram, son of a respectable silk merchant of Amritsar, received the whipping the other day at the hands of a biking European in front of the Small Cause Court. What the Lala ought to have done, in the opinion of our contemporary, was to turn upon his assailant like a Punjabi and give him such a thrashing as he would not have been in a hurry to forget. A Punjabi with his national reputation for muscle and courage has no right to go aweeping to the papers for having got a drubbing at the hands of another fellow.

RAHBAR,
14th September,
1906.

Assault on a native coolie by the Assistant Engineer of Jhansi.

56. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 14th September, notices the somewhat uncalled for treatment given by the Assistant Engineer of Bangalore, who took offence at the conduct of a coolie, wounded him with a spiked flag and kicked him so that he died of its effects in hospital. The matter was reported to the police on the engineer taking no action whatever. The magistrate wanted to record his statement (dying declaration) but he was too weak to speak. The accused admits the assault. Another coolie who accompanied the deceased at the time of the assault and had left the place after resigning his appointment has been called into Jhansi to give evidence.

ADVOCATE,
13th September, 1906.

The strained feelings between Europeans and Indians.

57. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 13th September, says only eleven days ago a Bombay gentleman boarded the Punjab Mail at Delhi to have the words "damned stinking Babu" flung at him by a sahib—a military officer to boot—because the gentleman did not reply to such an unmannerly question as "who's that?" with which he was accosted on entering the carriage but kept silent. The sahib's servant applied to the gentleman's servant and then to the gentleman himself to know if he had a first class ticket. Foiled here the sahib shouted for the station master. In the meantime a crowd had gathered there and the station master was long in coming. The sahib delivered a speech and thus rid himself of a little of his bile, and then took himself off. The gentleman who appears to be no other than Mr. Malabari writes on this:—

As I closed my eyes after a night's vigil I could not help feeling for the much-abused Babu. Poor Aryan brother—he has to bear the burden not only of his own sins, but also of the sins of all others thrown into contact with exclusive Bahadurs. Is this poor brother of mine, paying the penalty vicariously for our nascent independence, ever likely to upset the State coach in India? No, he is simply practising elocution; the real danger to the safety of the empire comes in from the men whom our King-Emperor pays for maintaining the safety. What could be more wanton misconduct than that shown by this officer? If he was so rude to a stranger, who had done him no harm, and who was above putting up with his whims, what must be his behaviour towards his men, the native sepoys who have to deal with him every day? I pity the men; and more than the sepoys, I pity the Government who have to put up with the sullen discontent created in our regiments by such outrageous arrogance. If it be beef and beer that lead to these ebullitions, the sooner they are abolished from the commissariat, the better for all concerned.

The gentleman does not mean to publish the name of the offender who got down at Muttra. Nor does he care for an apology from such a man. His remarks on the effect of such wantonly insulting conduct of the officer and others of his ilk should give food for sad reflection to the Government. He says:—

But what I had to undergo is common experience in the north. Only the other day a couple of European privates offered what was no less than a mortal insult to Punjabi nobles out on a walk with their families. Then there is the horrible Murree affair. What do these frequent insults and assaults mean? God forbid they should lead to a commotion, but the air in Upper India seems surcharged with pent up feeling which may escape any day, overtaking the innocent many for the sins of the scattered few.

RAHBAR,
14th September, 1906.

Europeans versus Indians.

58. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 14th September, says with reference to an advertisement in the Civil and Military Gazette, inviting applications from Europeans and Eurasians below the age of 24 years for appointment in the Accountant-General's Office at Lahore, that this is indirect contravention of what Mr. Morley said in his budget speech. The editor says that we seek justice and do not crave for favour, in requesting the Secretary of State to see that his subordinates act up to his views in this and other similar matters.

RAHBAR,
14th September, 1906.

The poverty of India.

59. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 14th September, says that the poverty of India is due to large exports and heavy rents, which stand in the way of people laying by enough for their requirements. His Highness the Maharaja of Boondi has stopped the export of grain from his principality, and no serious objection can be taken to his action in the matter, even if a limited number of banias have suffered for the good of the public at large. The orders have reduced the revenue of the State by one lakh, but the peace and prosperity that is reigning throughout, amply compensates the Maharaja for the loss he has sustained. The editor suggests that Government can in like manner make its subjects happy, but feeling diffident about the action of Government, commends his proposal to the earnest consideration of Indian landed proprietors and points out that permanent good can result to them only by securing the happiness of the people.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
15th September, 1906.

The poverty of India.

60. A correspondent in the Kanauj Punch, of 15th September, says that the famines in India are neither the result of drought nor due to heavy taxation on agricultural produce, but are due to the fact that fifty crores of rupees are passing annually out of India without any return. The country is becoming more and more impoverished every day in consequence, and but for this drain of India's wealth, famine would not make itself felt in India which is in itself a continent with varied climate all over.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
16th September,
1906.

The loyalty of India.

61. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 16th September, in discussing the relations of the English and Indians, says:—So long as British rule endures in India the Anglo-Indian community must be content to live side by side with the Indian community.

* * * * * * *

Referring to the mutiny of 1857 it remarks that the whole of the sepoy army did not revolt. The finest portion of it, composed of Sikhs and Gurkhas held firm and remained true to their salt, and rendered material help in subduing the rebellion. The educated classes were staunch in loyalty.

* * * * * * *

As the years passed the ban of suspicion was removed from the sepoy army. It is now above suspicion and has upheld the honour of the British flag on many fields and in different climes. But in two respects the old position of the sepoy army has not been restored. The artillery is no longer manned by sepoys, and the same class of rifles is no longer supplied to European and Indian troops alike.

The burden of suspicion has now shifted from the sepoys to the educated classes.

* * * * * * *

The prevailing belief of the Anglo-Indians is that loyalty is fast diminishing in India. The taint of disloyalty is sometimes fastened on one race, sometimes on another. If the Bengalis are disloyal, are Deccanis or the Punjabis any better? And if they are disloyal, what is the cause? We are asked to believe that the present Government is the best that India has ever had. If so, why should the class of people, who are in the best position to understand its benefits, prove disloyal? This is attributed to the innate perversity and wickedness of the educated class. Yet even these very classes, when British rule in India was in danger fifty years ago, remained staunch and loyal.

* * * * * * *

The personal ascendancy of the ruling class must diminish, and it has already diminished a great deal. The present scornful assumption of superiority by the ruling class will not be calmly submitted to by the educated classes, and even the working classes have given unmistakable evidence of feeling on this question. People have learned to dissociate British rule from individuals or a particular class.

* * * * * * *

In all this and more that may happen there is no menace to British rule, but it will have to adapt itself to the changed conditions of the country.

* * * * * * *

To promote a mutual understanding Anglo-Indians will have to unbend a great deal for the meekness of the Indian has reached the uttermost limit, and the reaction has come.

ADVOCATE,
16th September,
1906.

Government and public opinion.

62. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 16th September, says:—To the Government public opinion in India is in most cases another name for the opinion of the Anglo-Indian Chambers of Commerce, Defence Associations and such other bodies. Purely Indian opinion is very little cared for, much less sought after, scarcely given due weight to, even when thrust upon the attention of the rulers. The present position of the Chambers of Anglo-Indians and the Associations of Indians, Hindu and Muhammadan, is very ably delineated by Mr. Amir Ali in his article in the Nineteenth Century, where he says: "Twenty years ago, the opinions of the British Indian Association, the Central Muhammadan Association, and similar bodies in other parts of India were regarded as important auxiliaries to official sources of information. To-day the position is occupied by the Chamber of Commerce. The views of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, for instance, are received with marked deference; the highest functionaries attend its banquets and expatiate on those occasions on Imperial policy: and each President, on the termination of his service in the Supreme Council, is honoured with a Knighthood. The Chamber, guided by able leaders, is no doubt a source of strength to the Government; its pronouncements on public questions are generally characterised by breadth of vision and foresight. But instances are not wanting when its views have been distinctly out of harmony with the feelings of large sections of the Indian People." What occurs in this case? The inevitable—the Indian goes to the wall.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
12th September, 1906.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

63. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, of 12th September, fails to understand the motives that tend to exasperate the Hindu community at the expression of grief by Muhammadans on the departure of Sir Bampfylde Fuller who was their well-wisher and had therefore taken to revive their down-trodden rights and interests. Are they to sleep away all their lives, and to rejoice at the departure of those who secure their rights for them?

RAHBAR,
14th September, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

64. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 14th September, says that the success of the swadeshi movement depends on encouragement to indigenous arts and industries. About one-fourth of the Indian population consists of fakirs who depend for their livelihood on others: they have nothing to keep them engaged, and a large proportion of crime can be attributed to their being without occupation. The editor suggests that workshops and manufactories should be opened in all large cities, so as to find work for these men. He further advises the Indian public to give the swadeshi movement every possible encouragement; so that our country should be able to vie with others in indigenous arts and industries.

RAHBAR,
14th September, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

65. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 14th September, announces with much pleasure that the swadeshi movement is beginning to claim the attention of the public in the United Provinces and in Rajputana. Foreign sugar has been boycotted in Sakkar in Rajputana where the motion originated with Muhammadans. The editor then cites the efforts made in this direction in Muttra and Cawnpore, says that the lead so far has been taken by the middle classes, and that the wealthy and the educated communities who are mostly sycophants have held themselves aloof from the movement.

OUDH AKHBAR,
19th September, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

66. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 19th September, says that owners of foreign sugar manufactories have admitted that the blood of cows is very useful for the refinement of sugar, but that bones are used in preference as they are much cheaper. It appears also from what Babu Surendra Nath Banerji said on good authority at the occasion of his alleged coronation that the fat of cows and swine is employed in sizing piece goods. This has produced a great agitation in the minds of the Indian public, and the purohits and pujaris have resolved not to assist at religious ceremonies if their clients use cloth of foreign manufacture. The writer says that English manufactures have a very extensive field, but if Government encourages indigenous products and places the country once more on the pinnacle of glory the people will feel highly gratified and perpetuate the munificence of Government.

BHARAT JIWAN,
17th September, 1906.

The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of 17th September, furnishes similar information about the resolution of the purohits. It contains some verses exhorting the public to give up the use of all foreign articles and notifies the publication of a pamphlet by Pandit Vishnu Datt Dube of Benares describing the preparation of sugar and detailing the ingredients employed in its refinement; and of another published by one Chaube Lakshman Singh Sharma of the Etawah district supporting the statements made by quotations from eminent doctors and baids. The editor rejoices to learn that this latter pamphlet has now passed through its third edition.

AL BASHIR,
18th September, 1906.

Al Bashir (Etawah), of 18th September, contains a series of articles wherein the editor seems to attach much political significance to the coronation of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji and to his remarks on the occasion about the sizing of piece goods.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
16th September, 1906.

The editor of the Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), in its issue of 16th September, supports the views of Al Bashir, refers to the resolution of the purohits, and both think that Babu Surendra Nath Banerji's speeches are calculated to spread disaffection and that repressive measures should be adopted before it becomes too late.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
18th September, 1906.

The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijno-), of 18th September, says that the leading members of the various communities inhabiting India have expressed very encouraging hopes about the swadeshi movement, and invites in particular the attention of the Muhammadans to the views expressed by Shams-ul-Ulámá Dr. Nazir Ahmad. The editor says that any disparagement of the movement by Muhammadans cannot prove detrimental to its progress, and that the movement will lead to the employment of the men without work and to the supply of articles at a much cheaper cost.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
8th and 16th September, 1906.

The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), in its issues of 8th and 16th September, supports the views expressed by the Tohfa-i-Hind, dwells on the non-sectarian character of the movement, and points out that crores of Indian money will henceforward remain in the country instead of being sent to Great Britain.

MUSAFIR,
15th September, 1906.

The Musáfir (Agra), of 15th September, notices the two swadeshi meetings held at Agra on the 8th and 9th instant, one of them under the presidency of an influential Muhammadan, and points out that the meetings were remarkable for the apathy of the Muhammadans.

ARYA MITRA,
16th September, 1906.

The Árya Mitra (Agra), of 16th September, refers to the strike of the carters who were threatened to carry foreign salt at Silchar and to treat it as Government property. The editor points out that official oppression on the one hand and the famine on the other are making the lot of the people in Eastern Bengal very miserable.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
15th September, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

67. The Kanauj Punch, of 15th September, reports that Mr. Vishnu Vitthal has issued a circular letter announcing that an exhibition of indigenous arts and manufactures will be held on 8th October next in connection with the Kartiki bathing fair at Pandharpur in the Sholapur district. The fair is attended by lakhs of men, and the editor hopes that the advocates of the swadeshi movement will make every effort to make the exhibition a grand success.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
15th September, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

68. The Kanauj Punch, of 15th September, gives a brief account of a swadeshi meeting at Barisal which was presided over by Saiyad Mazhar Husain, barrister-at-law, and says that the report of the swadeshi Hindu Sabha shows that every effort is being made to make the swadeshi movement a success, and that 56 shops of foreign liquor have been closed during the period under report. Babu Surendra Nath Banerji delivered a lecture on the occasion. The editor thinks that the supporters of the movement are building castles in the air, and are trying to impress people with their importance.

OUDH AKHBAR,
17th September, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

69. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 17th September, says that the swadeshi movement is gaining strength with the opposition it receives. Not only is preference given to indigenous products, but the people are also giving it every possible support and are beginning to lay aside considerations of personal gain. The refusal of the Silchar coolies to carry foreign goods is an instance in point. The repressive measures so far adopted have proved unsuccessful, and this is due to the fact that the movement is calculated to promote the interests of both the rulers and the ruled.

RAHBAR,
14th September, 1906.

The strike on the Bengal-Nagpur Railway.

70. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 14th September, compliments the Agent of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway on his prudence in satisfying the demands of the strikers who have resumed work with renewed energy and cheerfulness. Inquiry shows that the cause of the strike was, that Mr. Bailey, the Superintendent of the workshop, tore to pieces the representation of grievances presented to him by the workmen. He has since been warned by his superiors.

KANAUJ PUNCH
15th September, 1906.

Strikes in India.

71. The Kanauj Punch, of 15th September, says that the strikes in India have been inaugurated by Western civilization and are calculated to produce beneficial results. The editor, however, regrets that the strikers do not take a comprehensive view as to when they strike work, and that their superior officers do not interpret their action as the outcome of necessity.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
19th September,
1906.

Telegraph strike in Rawalpindi.

72. The Nasim-i-Agra, of 19th September, says that the peons employed in the Telegraph office at Rawalpindi struck work on 8th September, and were dismissed on the day following. They have sent a representation to the Director-General of Telegraphs, who, the editor hopes, will look at all sides of the question before passing orders. The editor also remarks that the signs of the times are indicative of a better future for India.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
16th September,
1906.

The Anglo-Indian Press on the partition of Bengal and the consequent agitation.

73. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of 16th September, says that the alarm raised by the Anglo-Indian Press is only a piece of strategy devised to alienate the feelings of Government from the Bengalis, who are not so imprudent as to attempt to gain their ends by having recourse to sedition. The editor says that the coronation of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji was only a hoax played on the Anglo-Indian Press and that Government fully realizes its significance. The resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller, and the hopes held out by the Secretary of State regarding the Partition of Bengal are calculated to pacify the Bengalis. There can, however, be no doubt that the Bengalis are and will remain dissatisfied until the partition has been set aside. They are fully conscious of the immense power wielded by the British Government, but they trust that their loyal and constitutional agitation will eventually lead them to victory. Times have progressed too far to allow of any repressive measures, and the voice of Bengal will ring all over the civilized world if any attempt is made to put down just demands by the use of force.

ADVOCATE,
13th September,
1906.

Representation to the Secretary of State regarding the Partition of Bengal.

74. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 13th September, says, with reference to an article in New India on the present situation in Bengal giving reasons why a fresh memorial should not go to Mr. Morley on the partition question. The editor remarks that the reasons given are not convincing. It is surely not in the interests of Bengal, that the present excitement and ill-feeling should continue, and if it is true that the Government should be asked to reconsider the partition question, no time should then be lost in sending a strong representation to the Secretary of State for India.

RAHBAR,
14th September,
1906.

Complications in Bengal and the Golden Bengal.

75. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 14th September, says that boycott and other similar extravagant measures in Bengal are creating complications in Bengal and have brought a number of so-called leaders to the fore who charge Babu Surendra Nath with going to extremes, though they themselves are not a whit behind in this matter. The editor then makes a reference to Bipin Chander Pal and to the Golden Bengal, and gives a verbatim translation of the circular alleged to have been issued from Chinsurah.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
19th September,
1905.

The Golden Bengal.

76. The Nasim-i-Agra, of 19th September, says that the Englishman is much delighted at the discovery of the Golden Bengal, which the editor thinks is the invention of that paper with a view to injure the Bengalis.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW,
August, 1906.

Indian civilization.

77. A correspondent in the Hindustan Review (Allahabad), for August, challenges the views of another correspondent who contributed an article on the "Proposed Hindu University" in a recent issue of the same magazine, and says that the inhuman treatment of the Sudras is a product of the imagination of writers either ignorant of or inimical to the Hindus. The Sudras or persons born of Sudra parents were free in ancient India to acquire any kind of learning they wished, and to follow any profession they liked. There was no bar to their attaining the highest positions in the State. The writer cites Professors Max Müller and Wilson and certain Greek writers in support of his view; and says that it is nothing short of slander to say that the Hindu Social system scarcely treated its lowest castes as human beings.

Referring to the views of the Indian Nationalist on the efficacy of religion in education, the writer says that in ancient India the Hindus cared for religion more than for anything else, and that their religion consists in the knowledge of those eternal principles which govern nature and man, those immutable laws which in one sphere are called science, in another, true Philosophy. Its precepts are ever true, and it is a confident assertion of manhood.

The allegation that the very conception of patriotism was non-existent amongst Hindus he proves to be incorrect by quotations from Colonel Tod's Annals and Antiquities of Rajasthan. As regards the impracticability to impart instruction to students in the Hindi language, it is pointed out that the Indian Nationalist has advanced nothing to support his view. When the Japanese language has been capable of accomplishing it, why should not Hindi, which can always draw upon the limitless resources of Sanskrit. One of the chief reasons why Japan in thirty years has been able to transform itself into one of the first class nations in the world is that the whole nation is educated in the Japanese language ; and unless, an Indian language is made the vehicle of instruction, national ethics and national ideals will never come before the minds of people and no improvement, moral, social or political will be probable. Owing to the English education they have received, educated Hindus call to mind the great men of Europe in the several departments of life when they happen to think or talk about authors, poets, patriots, and conquerors, instead of referring to heroes of Indian history.

HINDUSTANI,
19th September,
1906.

A suggestion for establishing friendly relations amongst Indians.

78. A correspondent in the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of 19th September, says, that the Anglo-Indian Press is responsible for the agitation in the newspaper world, and that the Indians who encourage papers like the Pioneer, the Englishman and the Times in spite of the abusive language they employ, in speaking of them and their ancestors, are chiefly to blame in the matter. He deplores the attitude of the Indian Press in holding protest meetings all over India in connection with the resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller and points out that unity of religion as suggested by certain-Anglo Indian papers is not essential to the well-being of the nation. Selfishness and the influence of the Anglo-Indian Press in the matter are set forth as the chief causes of disunion, and it is suggested that religion and disunion should be looked upon as quite independent of one another, that the division of the country should henceforward be made, not on the principle of religion but on that of politics, that religion is personal and should not affect the interests of the nation or of the country as a whole, and that our present needs require us to infuse a sense of nationality and patriotism in the public mind. The correspondent suggests that for the present the country should be divided into two classes, the one to be called the friends of the country and the other those who oppose their views.

INSTITUTE
GAZETTE,
12th September,
1906.

The strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

79. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, of 12th September, says, that the Muhammadans are no doubt anxious to meet the Hindus half way, and to maintain the friendly relations that have existed between them for ages, but they somewhat suspect that the Hindus have some hidden motive in making these overtures. They are fully prepared to treat the Hindus as their brethren if the latter do not grudge them their dues.

OUDH AKHBAR,
17th September,
1906.

Increase in the Indian Army.

80. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 17th September, regrets very much that the increase in the Army has placed an additional burden on India, but points out that apart from other considerations the current of events in India that followed the Partition of Bengal has rendered the increase of the army a necessity; that the Government after a considerable lapse of time had begun to repose confidence in the people, but cannot now feel justified in doing so. The correspondent also refers to Mr. Morley's budget speech, and to the promises that have been made from time to time to the Indians, and points out that Government is very quietly watching our actions and is keeping itself constantly informed through the Intelligence Department. There are, he says, a number of Indians who mix with their countrymen freely only in order to be able to get a thorough insight into their feelings and doings so as to furnish full particulars to Government.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
18th September,
1906.

A suggested scheme for exercising effective control over public departments.

81. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of 18th September, says that the expansion of the Legislative Council and the right of addressing the Council for three days given to the Indian members will not conduce to better results unless steps are taken to repress official high-handedness. The editor suggests that every department should have a committee of its own for examining public grievances against the officials of the department, and ascribes the good reputation that the Postal department enjoys to an arrangement of this description.

SITARA-I-HIND,
12th September,
1906.

Loans on interest.

82. The Sitára-i-Hind (Moradabad), of 12th September, invites the attention of Government to the exorbitant rates of interest at which money lenders advance money and to the ruinous effects of the practice on respectable people, raises, nawabs, and rajas. The editor suggests the need of striking at the root of usury which is very detrimental to the progress of the country.

EXPRESS,
13th September,
1906.

Pasteurism in India.

83. The Express (Lucknow), of 13th September, while reviewing the fifth Annual Report of the Pasteur Institute at Kasauli, attributes the popularity of the Institute to the fact that in India any institution partonized by Government is sure to be appreciated both by the Indians and Europeans, but the editor considers the inoculation test to be fallacious and misleading, because bites by animals that are not rabid are often treated for hydrophobia. He thinks the certificates of rabies given by veterinary surgeons or medical officers are of no value as there are no post mortem appearances that can be regarded as absolutely characteristic of the disease, so that it is extremely probable that nearly all of these patients had been bitten by animals that were not mad, and therefore were in no danger at all. The proportion of persons who contract hydrophobia having been variously estimated at from 5 to 20 per cent., the likelihood of a dog-bite causing hydrophobia is extremely small. He opines that hydrophobia in India is and has been practically non-existent, except in cases where the serum inoculated in patients at the Pasteur Institute was sufficiently powerful to induce hydrophobia, which would account for the number of deaths from that disease at Kasauli.

He quotes the opinion of Sir James Thornton in support of his view as to the non-existence of hydrophobia in India.

RAHBAR,
14th September,
1906.

The Civil Surgeon of Jhansi and his mania for salams.

84. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 14th September, says that the Civil Surgeon of Jhansi was much displeased at the conduct of the son of a local pleader who happened to be in the local public charitable dispensary, and refused to salam him even on being told that the officer whom he had slighted was the Civil Surgeon. The latter finding the boy obstinate, held out threats of handing him over to the police, still the boy persisted in his refusal to salam and eventually sought redress in a court of law. The case however was withdrawn on the Civil Surgeon tendering an apology. The editor expresses a hope that the Civilians of these provinces will take a lesson from this case, and it will be much better than not to hanker after salams in future so as to obviate the need of an apology.

CAWNPORE,
GAZETTE,
15th September,
1906.

Tobacco.

85. A correspondent in the Cawnpore Gazette, of 15th September, points out the evil consequences of the use of tobacco, and suggests legislation to prevent its use by boys and youths below the age of 25 years.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
19th September,
1906.

The prospects of Hospital Assistants attached to jail dispensaries.

86. The Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of 19th September, points out that the hospital assistants attached to the Jail dispensaries are at a great disadvantage, and the limited stock of medicines and the treatment of patients in jails are in no way calculated to improve their experience or pecuniary prospects, that they have no opportunities of taking up any private practice; and any inattention to work which is simply natural under these discouraging circumstances leads to their being reported on unfavourably which spoils their prospects in future. The allowance sanctioned for these hospital assistants is given at the end of the year, and only if their work is reported on favourably by the Superintendents of Jails, who are very reluctant to admit prisoners on the sick list and are in consequence chiefly responsible for the mortality in jails. The hospital assistants are placed under the Inspector-General of Jails, who is guided by the opinions of the Superintendents, and these, the editor thinks, are mostly ill-tempered and given to using language which no man with self-respect can bear.

HINDUSTANI,
19th September,
1906.

Abolition of quarantine rules in Bombay.

87. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of 19th September, notes with satisfaction the abolition of quarantine rules in Bombay and hopes that intending pilgrims to Hedjaz will not be detained without reasonable cause.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
18th September, 1906.

Qurq Amins.

88. The editor of the Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), espouses the cause of the Qurq Amins in its issue of 18th instant and points out that they should be paid regularly like Government servants in other departments.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
19th September 1906.

Repression of newspapers.

89. The Nasim-i-Agra, of 19th September, says that the Magistrate of Nowshera Cantonment has ordered the preparation of a list of persons subscribing to the Bengalee, the Amrita Bazar Patrika, and the Punjabi. There is only one subscriber to the Punjabi, and pressure is being brought to bear upon him with a view to get him to discontinue the paper. The editor refers to Mr. Morley's promise to inquire into complaints of this nature, and appeals to him for redress.

VI.—Railway.

ADVOCATE,
13th September, 1906.

The Railway Board.

90. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 13th September, says that the Railway Board stands very much in need of an Indian member on it, to place before it and urge it to consider the case of the really paying customers of the railway lines. When for better administration of the country the association of Indians with Anglo-Indians is admitted as a very practical reform, the Railway Board cannot afford to live outside the Indianising influence. In adopting such a measure the Government would only be endearing itself more to the people, and no vested right will thereby be jeopardised.

ADVOCATE,
13th September, 1906.

Proposal to establish a city booking station at Fyzabad.

91. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of 13th September, writes that a representation has been made by the residents of Fyzabad to the Traffic Superintendent, Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, Lucknow, proposing the establishment of a city booking station for coaching traffic. The representation was submitted to the Deputy Commissioner, Mr. L. C. Porter, who has sent it on to the Traffic Superintendent. The signatories include almost all the raises, title holders, barristers, pleaders, deputy collectors, honorary magistrates, members of the municipal and district boards, Government officials, bankers and merchants, etc. of the city, and it is hoped that this fact will induce the Railway authorities to consider favourably the request contained in the representation. It is suggested that a booking station should be established at No. 113, Level Crossing, near the Gulab Bari Park. The present station is alleged to convenient only to people residing in the civil lines and cantonments, and a small minority of the native population, and that the proposed station would divert to the railway nearly all the traffic between Fyzabad and Ajudhia, now carried by gharries and ekkas and would give a great stimulus to parcel traffic.

RAHBAR,
14th September, 1906.

Corruption in the Railway Department.

92. A correspondent in the Rahbar (Moradabad), of 14th September, says that transhipment and delivery of goods, appointments and promotions, in fact everything in the railway department necessitates some extra payment before one can get what he wants. He considers this state of affairs to be very deplorable.

RAHBAR,
14th September, 1906.

The catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

93. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 14th September, says that the complaints made by it and other newspapers against Madan Mohan Lal and other contractors have not been attended to so far, probably because they are not referred to the railway authorities. The editor then asks the latter what action they propose to take, as the newspapers are the medium for expressing public opinion, and what they say gives ample proofs that the catering arrangements are unsatisfactory. He also points out that one Lachman Prasad, a dependent of Lala Madan Mohan Lal, is a clerk in the Traffic Superintendent's office, that he manages to get information in which Madan Mohan Lal is interested and communicates it to him This Lachman Prasad is suffering from palsy induced by constant drinking, and is quite unfit for work.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
16th September, 1906.

Railway employés.

94. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 16th September, says:—The memorial submitted by the employés of the Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway shows clearly that the men want better terms everywhere and they will obtain better terms if they will only go the proper way about it. The political wire-pulling in Bengal, of which so much was made, does not hold water here at all. So long labour has had no rights. Men have been employed and dismissed as it pleased their employers. Now the men have found out that they are as necessary to capital as capital is necessary for their living. We hope therefore that the authorities of this railway will meet their men in a proper spirit, and not drive them to a strike by the pig-headed pride of capitalists. The Bengal-Nagpur Railway had no difficulty in dealing with their men, because they saw that the men had grievances, and were satisfied as soon as they were sympathetically treated.

OUDH AKHBAR,
17th September, 1906.

The Phillour outrage on a Muhammadan lady travelling by rail.

95. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 17th September, feels highly gratified at learning that the Head-constable who outraged a Muhammadan lady recently while she was travelling by rail has been convicted, and notes with regret that police officers and men of all grades seem to forget that they are human beings as soon as they get into the force.

NASIM-I AGRA,
19th Septembe, 1906.

Railway arrangements.

96. The editor of the Nasim-i-Agra, of 19th September, says from personal experience that the trains are overcrowded to suffocation, and that the arrangements for the supply of water are unsatisfactory, and suggests reform.

VII.—POST OFFICE.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
19th September, 1906.

Postal fraud in effacing stamps and its remedy.

97. The editor of the Nasim-i-Agra, of 19th September, says that a number of cases of theft of stamps have occurred ever since the postal authorities have forbidden the practice of defacing stamps, and suggests that the old practice may be resorted to, with the reservation that if the defacement makes the stamp look suspicious the article should be treated as bearing.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
16th September, 1906.

Conversion of ten lakhs of Parsis to Islam.

98. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of 16th September, says that ten lakhs of Parsis of Kazan in Russia have formally announced to the Czar their intention of embracing Islam. The editor thinks that their conversion will be a miracle, as there is neither a mission nor an association in Russia for the propagation of Islam. The fact that millions of Jews and Christians are taking up their residence in Turkey gives practical proof of the freedom of Islam from bigotry and prejudice, and it is probably on this account that this large body of Parsis is prepared to become Musalmans, and to look upon Turkey as heaven in comparison with Russia.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
16th September, 1906.

Religious discussions in India.

99. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of 16th September, says that union amongst Hindus or Muhammadans, or between Hindus and Muhammadans, is an impossibility so long as religious schisms exist and religious antipathies are at work. The Aryas are constantly wrangling not only with the followers of the Sanatan Dharma, but also with the Muhammadans, who again are split into innumerable sects of their own. The editor says that Mirza Qadyani has worked much mischief in spreading ill-feeling amongst Muhammadans. Such religious ill-feeling is not to be met with in Europe, nor are pamphlets used there for religious discussions as in India.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW,
August 1906.

The widow remarriage movement.

100. A correspondent in the Hindustan Review (Allahabad) for August, after detailing the history of the widow remarriage movement in India, remarks that it is dying a slow death in Bengal, and few cases of such marriages occur at present. In a good many cases marriage is neither possible nor desirable, and recourse should be had to education to mitigate the rigours of widowhood. The correspondent remarks that the sentiment of consecrating one's life at the death of the husband or wife is very laudable, but we should not corrupt such a sentiment by sacrificing at its altar girls who lose their husbands at tender ages, while we allow men near their graves to marry; and every attempt should be made to allow a feeling to grow in society that it is permissive to a widow to marry if she chooses.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
13th September,
1906.

Swami Jogindropal's lecture and the Deputy Commissioner of Gurdaspur.

101. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of 13th September, says that the order of the Deputy Commissioner of Gurdaspur prohibiting Swami Jogindropal from lecturing was due probably to misrepresentations made by experienced professors of the divine path (Muhammadan leaders). The Swami was delivering the lecture in the samaj building, and Muhammadans and Christians alike could abstain from going there, more particularly when the public know that every lecturer on religion compares the tenets of his faith with those of others, and cites illustrations in support of his views in a manner calculated to disparage other religions. The editor fails to understand why this unprecedented procedure was adopted in this case, when Muhammadan and Christian preachers are allowed to preach every day along public roads. He says that the order has caused much discontent in Arya circles and was intended perhaps to satisfy Muhammadan or Christian preachers. The editor concludes by inviting the attention of the Supreme Government to the order.

Europe and Asia.

GAUHAR-I-SHAHWAR,
September,
1906.

1. The editor of the Gauhar-i-Shahwár (Lucknow), for September, says that the victory and firmness of Japan, the agitation of the Bengalis and the Congressmen, the military preparations of Kabul, the Parliament in Persia, and the Caliphate of the Sultan, are causing considerable anxiety and excitement amongst Europeans, and their commercial and political activity is beginning to flag in China, Arabia, Egypt, Central Asia, Persia, the Persian Gulf, Morocco, and in Northern, Central, and Western Africa. The European Powers are apparently applauding and befriending Japan, but are really waiting for an opportunity. They are so afraid of Japan that they dare not think of molesting China, they are extolling Persia for having adopted the representative form of government, but no reliance can be placed on their present attitude. The affairs in Turkey, Arabia, Egypt, Morocco and other Muhammadan countries, and their relations with Christian Powers are becoming more and more strained and complicated, while the relations of the Christian Powers in Europe are becoming cemented by treaties and alliances.

The editor points out that peace cannot last long, and it is highly desirable that Asiatic Powers should either combine and be up and doing, or leave their future welfare in the hands of European Powers.

Shaikh Abdul Qadir, B A., and Shaikh Mushir Husain, Taluqdar, in Turkey.

GAUHAR-I-SHAHWAR,
September,
1906.

2. The Gauhar-i-Shahwár (Lucknow), for September, says that Shaikh Abdul Qadir, B.A, editor of the Observer (Lahore), and Shaikh Mushir Husain, Taluqdar of Gadya in the Bara Banki district, who are at present in Constantinople, are visiting important towns and cities in Turkey with a view to establish better relations between the Muhammadans of Turkey and India. The editor says that the Sunni Muhammadans are showing great foresight in establishing friendly relations with Kabul, Egypt and Turkey.

The coronation anniversary of the Sultan of Turkey.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
20th September,
1906.

3. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of 20th September, says that the Muhammadans of Rangoon, while celebrating the anniversary of the coronation of the Sultan of Turkey, offered prayers for his long life and prosperity. The editor says that this is due to the fact that the Sultan is regarded as the Caliph of the Muhammadans, and is afraid that such views will be looked upon as seditious by a certain section of the Muhammadan community in India.

The Persian Parliament.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
20th September,
1906.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 20th September, says that Persia has now a Parliament of its own, and an ordinance convoking the National Council has been issued at Teheran. Representative government has succeeded in Europe, where it was unknown some centuries ago. It has already proved a marvellous success in Japan, and with Japan, Persia, and China under representative government, what possible excuse will be left for withholding the boon from India. To maintain their own credit the British Government must see that India keeps ahead of at least Russia and Persia, otherwise the much-lauded excellence of Indian administration will have become a meaningless pharse.

(b).—Home.

The ensuing Congress.

URDU-I-MUALLA,
September, 1906.

5. The editor of the Urdu-i-Mualla, for September, says that there will no doubt be some difficulties at the next meeting of the Congress in Calcutta, owing to a schism in the camp, one section of the leaders of this national movement is of opinion that the time has come when the old ways of begging from Government, and seeking favours at its hands should be forsaken, and that the Congress should not at all hesitate to boycott British manufactures openly. The editor says that Mr. Tilak and Khaparde are the exponents of these extreme views, and it is high time that political leaders like them should take the presidential chair at the annual Congress meetings. The other section which is led by Babu Surendra Nath Banerji,

Mr. Pheroze Shah Mehta and many others still hold that the time has not yet come to adopt extreme measures, and that they should still stick to their old ways of doing things.

The editor also suggests that as urged by the Punjab people, it is extremely desirable that each Province should have a Political Association of its own so as to be able to consider political matters all the year round.

URDU-I MUALLA,
September, 1906.

Politics and the Muhammadans of India.

6. The Urdu-i-Mualla (Aligarh), for September, says that looking at the present needs and requirements of India it seems to be a great mistake to exclude Politics altogether from schools and colleges, and those who profess to do so, are found practically to be taking one side or another in the political questions of the day. The contributor then points out that the trustees of the Aligarh College feel themselves compelled to keep aloof from political matters and inculcate the same teachings to the students: but as a matter of fact neither the students nor the trustees can be said to have nothing to do with politics, inasmuch as they interest themselves in such matters and in the Government of the country: for instance, both those who support the National Congress, as well as those who oppose its views can be said to take a share in political matters. Thus the allegation of the Muhammadan leaders about their taking no share in politics resolves itself into an assertion that they do not oppose the policy of Government. They are agitating about the resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller merely because they believe that their action will not be opposed to the views and the policy of Government. He says in conclusion that now that the Muhammadans of Dacca and those connected with the management of the Aligarh College have made themselves so bold as to make a representation to Government with a view to secure their interests, a day may come when they will stand up to oppose its measures for similar purposes.

ASR-I-JADID,
September, 1906.

The Liberal Government and the Muhammadans of India.

7. The Asr-i-Jadid (Lucknow), for September, says that it is highly desirable that a Muhammadan political association should be constantly agitating and bringing the needs of the Muhammadan community to the notice of the Liberal Government, that the Muhammadans will not get their rights in the shape of responsible and lucrative appointments, seats in the Legislative Council, or in the University, if such a course is not adopted, and that a small body of educated Hindus is at present monopolising all important appointments. The editor says that if the Legislative Council is expanded on principles of election, as suggested by Mr. Morley in his Budget speech, further difficulties will crop up in the way of Muhammadans.

QULQUL,
17th September, 1906.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller and the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal.

8. The Qulqul (Bijnor), of 17th September, deprecates the attitude of the Muhammadans who have been expressing their heartfelt sympathies with Sir Bampfylde Fuller, and have set a high value on his circular, which the editor thinks cannot benefit them without the approval of the Supreme Government.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
20th September, 1906.

The situation in Bengal.

9. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 20th September, says that just as the rest of India was beginning to feel a definite admiration for Bengal and the energy of the Bengalis, it has received a rude shock, and we have been forcibly reminded of the fact that the people of India are still lacking in self-discipline and self-abnegation, without which no great undertaking can ever be completed. The very wise advice of the Statesman to the Bengal leaders that they should forget their differences and present a united front if they wish to achieve success should be followed at once. . . . . . The present difference in Bengal is mainly personal. Babu Surendra Nath Banerji is just now the most prominent leader in Bengal and the acknowledged leader of the agitation, but he permits things to be done in his name without exercising sufficient control over them. The account of the crowning ceremony which did not appear in any other paper except his own was such an affair. Such an opportunity was not to be missed for anything in the world. The Anglo-Indian Press represented the ceremony as dangerous, and several of the Bengal papers ridiculed it and said that Babu Surendra Nath was so inordinately vain that he was unfit for leadership. But we are not very sure whether those who denounced Babu Surendra Nath Banerji were not actuated by mere personal jealousy. A far more serious danger has now appeared. This is nothing less than an attempt to drag the Indian National Congress into the vortex of the quarrel in Bengal. The development of the present situation is not devoid of interest and humour. A new orator has appeared in Bengal who has declared that the swadeshi and the boycott movements should be the principal subjects before the next Congress in Calcutta, and, with a view to secure this object, the nomination of Mr. Tilak to the presidentship of the Congress was put forward. At meetings held in the mufassil an open canvas was set on foot for the nomination of Mr. Tilak. It was an undisguised attempt to force the hands of the Congress.

A proceeding of this kind was very unfair to Mr. Tilak himself to begin with. Although the reception committee proposes the names of the President, the decision practically rests with the other provinces. This unwise move in Bengal has at once elicited strong protests from Bombay, Madras, the Central Provinces, and other places, so that the candidature of Mr. Tilak is out of the question. Those who have placed him in this unpleasant position have done him a distinct disservice. The quibbling about Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji is equally absurd. His name might not have been formally proposed by the reception committee, but since he has signified his assent his election will be easily confirmed by the unanimous voice of the country.

There is at present a proposal in Bengal to establish a council to control and guide all public movements and agitations. This may have the effect of smoothing differences of opinion and discouraging individual prominence, and the sooner the scheme is carried out the better.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th September, 1906.

Babu Surendra Nath Banerji and his appeal to the Muhammadans.

10. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 24th September, says that Babu Surendra Nath Banerji, the national hero of Bengal and the energetic political leader of India, has in one of his leaders published in the Bengalee expressed great sympathy with the Muhammadans, and has appealed to them to co-operate with the Hindus in securing their common political rights in the administration of the country. He exhorts them to stand side by side with the Hindus in supporting the political agitation that began in Aligarh and was inaugurated by the late Sir Saiyad Ahmad. The editor thinks that the appeal is intended to induce the Muhammadans to refrain from laying their memorial before the Viceroy through a deputation representing the Muhammadans of India, and to make an amicable settlement. He says that regard being had to the past experiences at the hands of Hindus who are actuated by religious prejudices, racial feeling and selfishness, no Muhammadan will agree to this arrangement. He suggests that both communities should secure their political rights independently, and then unite to take measures necessary to improve the happiness and prosperity of the country.

RAHBAR,
21st September, 1906.

Government by a Viceroy in India.

11. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 21st September, while speaking of the thankfulness of the people of Persia for the boon conferred on them by their king in the form of representative government, points out that the lot of India is very different, that the Viceroy here is sent out for a term of five years only, that each one of them naturally tries to raise the Government revenue in order to be able to show better results than his predecessors, and that therefore the circumstances taken as a whole are not calculated to create any genuine sympathy between the ruler and the ruled.

The proposed memorial of the Muhammadans to the Viceroy.

12. The Áwáza-i-Khlaq (Benares), of 24th September, says that certain leading Muhammadans are obtaining the signatures of their co-religionists, without taking them into confidence as to the object for doing so. The editor suggests that it will be the duty of every Muhammadan to find out the contents of the memorial before he affixes his signature to it.

HINDUSTANI,
26th September, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation to the Viceroy.

13. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of 26th instant, says that experience has shown that the Muhammadans have injured themselves by retaining a passive attitude in political matters, that there is however still a party at Aligarh that charges the Congressmen, with endeavouring to secure the interests of the Hindus to the detriment of the Muhammadans, that the deputation will request the Viceroy to direct that there should be a fixed number of Muhammadans in the Council of the Secretary of State, the Legislative Councils and the Municipal Boards, and that a similar request will be made with regard to the distribution of appointments in the superior and inferior service.

The editor says that these suggestions if carried into effect will not do any good to the Muhammadans at large, that such a step will produce dissatisfaction, that a feeling of nationality will not take its root in India, and that it will not be possible to prepare the Indians even at some distant date for self-government. Such a step will produce want of confidence and will tend to widen the gulf between Hindus and Muhammadans. He says that there can be no objection to giving the Muhammadans their due share of appointments, provided really capable men are forthcoming, and no complications arise in the Government of India, that if the Hindu and Muhammadan members are elected by distinct bodies of voters, such a course will be in contravention of all principles of selection and past experience, and all educated Indians will be prepared to oppose such a measure strenuously. He says there is no reason why other communities should not seek to have similar measures for themselves, if such a course is adopted in the case of Muhammadans.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
20th September,
1906.

The recent election for the Viceroy's Council.

14. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 20th September, says that widespread indignation has been felt at the manner in which the last election of a representative of these provinces in the Viceroy's Council was carried out. And the feeling is directed against Rai Sri Ram alone, for having acted as an obstructionist and displayed a want of sense of public duty which is in the highest degree reprehensible. At the first meeting held at Allahabad there was a tie between him and Rai Nihal Chand. Rai Sri Ram saw that he could not get more than four votes. At a second ballot it was not sure that he could get even so many. Rai Nihal Chand seeing that it was not certain whether he would secure a majority of votes very generously came forward to propose the name of the more capable and most popular candidate. Rai Sri Ram not only proposed no name but positively refused to vote for Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, when his vote would have secured his election at once. And when it came to Munshi Madho Lal, who had already given his vote to Pandit Madan Mohan, Rai Sri Ram's vote might just as well have been put in the waste paper basket, for even without his vote the election was assured. The manner in which Rai Sri Ram has flouted the public opinion of both provinces is scandalous, and we sincerely trust that at the next opportunity he will be ejected from the local Legislative Council.

ARYA MITRA,
24th September,
1906.

The Council of the Secretary of State for India.

15. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 24th September, says that Mr. Finlay, a member of the Council of the Secretary of State, is coming out to India as a member of the Viceregal Council, there are thus two vacancies in the India Council in England. The editor asks if any Indians will be appointed to fill them up.

ARYA MITRA,
24th September,
1906.

Self-government in India.

16. The editor of the Árya Mitra (Agra), of 24th September, points out that a Parliament has been convoked to govern Persia, which is far inferior to India in every respect, and says that now that China and Persia have adopted the representative form of Government, the allegation that India is yet unfit for self-government can be attributed to nothing except the selfish policy of the British Government.

ADVOCATE,
20th September,
1906.

India—an insoluble problem.

17. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), says in a leader in its issue of the 20th September, that Mr. Morley has in his Budget speech touched only on the fringe of Indian reforms. He then refers to the remarks of M. De laMotte, a prominent French Colonial officer, about the large mortality caused by the famine during the past six years amongst the inhabitants of India, and to his opinion that the British Government in India has not been successful from an economic point of view. He then quotes passages from an article in the latest number of the Positivist Review by Mr. Beesley who says that "the most urgent difficulty of India is an economic one. . . . . The population is the poorest in the world. . . . . And this poor half-starved population has to support the most expensive Government in the world. This is the insoluble problem."

It is then pointed out that Mr. Morley's handling of the economic question left much to be desired both in breadth and profundity. To pass over in silence the annual drain of wealth from India to Europe without any economic return, and the real significance of the great excess of exports over imports, while attention is hinted to casual scraps of information about the use of sewing machines and mineral oil looks very like running away from the "insoluble problem." The swadeshi movement, including the boycott of British goods, says the editor, is but an attempt from the Indian standpoint at the solution of the insoluble problem. It is suggested that we expect from Mr. Morley an honest endeavour after liberalising the entire policy of the British rulers, political and administrative, economic and educational, that such an attitude is called for at the present time, not only in the interests of truth, but in those of peaceful and conciliatory Government : peace between India and Anglo-Indian merchants and manufacturers, and a spirit of conciliation to enable the arts of peace—trade and commerce—to flourish and enrich the land.

He concludes with saying that in the face of the very serious situation we are in, aggravated by recurring famines, any wrangle over the comparative incidence of taxation in England and India or quibbling over the average annual income of an Indian is quite beside the mark, and rather a flippant way of handling a serious question. Mr. Morley admits India is a poor country, but does not stop to enquire why it is so, still less whether Indian poverty moves on an ascending or descending scale. He feels the system of Government is costly, and even suspects it is extravagant, but the next moment shunts himself aside and consoles himself with the thought that England is no less in the same predicament. . . . . There is again the disproportionate rise between prices of things and wages of labour, skilled and unskilled. Far more serious is the increasing pressure on land, which means contraction of the field of non-agricultural occupations.

ADVOCATE,
23rd September,
1906.

The attitude of the British colonies.

18. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 23rd September, says that the creed of British colonists all over the world seems to be to milch England, the mother, for their own profit. This is aptly illustrated by a reference to a petition only lately submitted to the House of Commons by some colonists inhabiting the table land between the coast line of East Africa and the kingdom of Uganda, who have remarked in their application that "though the Imperial Exchequer contributes £ 250,000 per annum to the cost of administration in East Africa, the burden of taxation borne by each colonist is far greater per head than that borne on account of East Africa by each Imperial tax payer." The editor remarks that the conclusion is easy to draw. The British Government has a black police to do the work of watch and ward. The Colonists have stated in their petition that "as the country becomes more settled, as fences are erected, and the black savage finds himself shut out from the enjoyment of the land which before he could roam over and enjoy, so will his resentment grow. From being a smouldering fire, that resentment will after a time break into flame, and when it does it may even cause hereditary tribal enemies to unite in rebellion against the common foe of both, the white man."

The editor remarks that the petition proves clearly what the Indian is to expect from the British Colonist, wherever he may be, Canada or Australia, Africa or the West Indies. A son who exacts from his own mother can hardly be expected to respect anybody else's mother, much less a black man's mother.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
23rd September,
1906.

The Anglo-Indian Press.

19. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 23rd September, says that, judging from the general tendency of the writings of the Anglo-Indian Press, it must be presumed that the community it represents feels no interest in the people of India, whom it either despises or ignores ; that the Anglo-Indian community has no sympathy with the aspirations of the people ; that it is bitterly opposed to the educated classes ; that it believes in repression and forcible suppression of all agitation ; and that it resents any change in the abject position of the subject population.

Such a presumption would be grossly misleading, for the Anglo-Indian community as a whole, does not believe in the lines adopted by the Anglo-Indian Press.

* * * * * * * * *

If the Anglo-Indian Press had its way the Congress would have been forbidden, Indian newspapers would have been suppressed, and Indian leaders would have been clapped in jail.

* * * * * * * * *

The Anglo-Indian Press fulfils the functions of a reptile Press. It has done absolutely nothing to bring the rulers and the ruled together in India, but has done everything to widen the gulf. Not content with that, it is seeking to divide the resident population against itself. It has had in its power to do an immense amount of good, but it has systematically done evil. . . . .

Earnest and thoughtful Indians take no notice of the venomous writings of the Anglo-Indian Press.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

OUDH AKHBAR,
26th September,
1906.

The advent of the Amir of Kabul.

20. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 26th September, says that the ruler of Kabul has been acknowledged by the British Government, and the reception to be accorded to him will differ considerably from that of the Amirs Sher Ali Khan and Abdul Rahman Khan at Rawalpindi and Umballa. The correspondent Aghlab of Mohan, who has evinced considerable interest in trans-frontier matters, says that the Amir of Afghanistan occupies now the same position as the king of Persia, the Sultan of Turkey, and the Kings of Europe, and it is therefore necessary that he should be received by the Viceroy at the railway station in case he is present in the city where the darbar is to be held. He points out that there is only one darbar chair, and the Shah will have a preferential title to it, and that it has to be considered what seat will be occupied by the Viceroy. He suggests that all minute details connected with the visit of the Shah should receive due consideration before his arrival, lest something happens which he looks upon as a slight, and this attempt to cultivate friendly feelings produces undesirable results.

OUDH AKHBAR,
27th September,
1906.

The Amir of Kabul and his visit to India.

21. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 27th September, says that the distinction accorded by the British Government to the Amir of Afghanistan by acknowledging him to be a king is the result of policy and self-interest, and the Government is humouring the Amir lest he should enter into close relations with the Czar and cause apprehensions. He says that the interviews between European monarchs are all the outcome of policy, that the Amir has not sent his ambassadors to Persia, Turkey and other countries as he is very much in doubt as to their recognizing him as a king and as their equal. He thinks that it is all very well to talk of having a British ambassador at Kabul and of opening railway lines in Afghanistan, but one has to see how far the Amir is prepared to accept the views of the British Government in the matter.

Officiating and probationary munsifs in the United Provinces.

22. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of 20th September, discussing the appointed of the permanent or officiating munsifs in the Agra Province from amongst vakils who have practised as such for three years, refers to the inadequacy of the officiating allowance of Rs. 150, and to the difficulty that officiating munsifs have in getting back their practice on reversion and suggests that the officiating munsifs should get Rs. 200, that they should be entitled to travelling allowance, that seniority among officiating men should prevail in case of reversion, and that a certain number of whole-timed candidates should be recruited as officiating or probationary munsifs. He also points out that since the High Court has made it a rule that judicial officers intending to go on leave or furlough, should intimate such intention, at the beginning of the year, there should be little or no difficulty in calculating the number of vacancies to be filled up, and the corresponding number of the officiating or probationary munsifs required for them. He concludes with the remark that this is nearly the system lately adopted in the case of the United Provinces' Deputy Collectors, and that all hope for the attention of the authorities, especially the Honourable High Court.

Muhammadan Judges in Indian High Courts.

ASR-I-JADID,
September,
1906.

23. The Asr-i-Jadid (Lucknow), for September, while lamenting the death of Mr. Badruddin Taiyabji, the last Muhammadan Judge in the Indian High Courts, points out that the absence of the Muhammadan Judges from the High Court benches is due to the fact that they lack co-operation, and do not wish to trumpet forth their qualifications.

Muhammadan Judges in High Courts in India.

ARYA MITRA,

1906.

24. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of 24th September, points out that the death of Mr. Badruddin Taiyabji removes the last of the three Muhammadan Judges in the Indian High Courts, and suggests that Muhammadan Judges should continue to be appointed in the High Courts in India.

The strikers and their cases in courts of law.

RAHBAR,
21st September,
1906.

25. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 21st September, says that the accused in re Hari Mohan Banerji complainant has been sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment including three months' solitary confinement and a fine of fifty rupees, while Raghunandan has been acquitted. The editor says that the accused in the former case was charged with throwing nitrous acid on the complainant, who was a station-master and was going to attend to his duties while others were at strike, and that Raghunandan was charged with embezzling money belonging to the company, and pleaded that the case had been got up against him by the strikers as he would not join them. He concludes with the remark that the severe sentence in the one, and the acquittal in the other case clearly indicate the policy that has guided the decision of these two cases.

Prosecution of the Sub-Inspector of Seohara in the Bijnor district.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th September,
1906.

26. The editor of the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 24th September, says that as the Sub-Inspector of Seohara has been transferred to another district to ensure justice and to obviate the possibility of his influencing the witnesses in the case against him, his continued retention at Seohara is highly reprehensible.

Sentences on Eurasian Railway employes.

HINDUSTANI,
26th September,
1906.

27. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of 26th September, says that the sentences passed on the Eurasian railway employés who assaulted certain Jaipur women on the Bareilly railway are extremely lenient, and that Government should take up the matter and ask for sufficiently deterrent sentences.

Laxity of supervision over the staff of the Court of Wards.

SAHIFA,
19th September,
1906.

28. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of 19th September, says that the services of the Court of Wards are now utilized on a very extensive scale, and this necessitates a close supervision over their work and relations with the taluqdars and the tenants. Inspecting officers and members of the Board while on tour should ascertain how far zilladars and sarbarahkars have won the goodwill of the people, and to what extent they bring things under their official charge into their private use. Inter-district and inter-divisional transfers are recommended at least once every five years.

Rent and revenue work in courts of Deputy Collectors.

ZUL QARNAIN,
21st September,
1906.

29. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of 21st September, says that the amendment of the Rent Act has considerably increased the revenue work of the Deputy Collectors, and this is due to the fact that the civil procedure now governs rent and revenue cases. Deputy Collectors as a rule give precedence to criminal over revenue work, and the result is that cases are put off from time to time to the great inconvenience of parties and witnesses in rent and revenue cases. The editor suggests that in case the Judicial and the Executive branches cannot be separated, a number of Deputy Collectors may, in the meantime, be set apart for purely executive work, and that others may be entrusted with rent and revenue cases only.

INDIAN STANDARD,
3rd September, 1906.

Police attitude towards certain Bengali students in Ahmedabad.

30. The Indian Standard (Allahabad), of 3rd September, received on 24th September, says:—We are sorry to learn that the Bengali young men who have gone to Ahmedabad to study the art of weaving were called to the city police headquarters and were submitted to an examination of their bodies with a view to note the marks thereon. This is a great insult not only to the Bengali student community but to the entire Indian community. This can only be done in case of criminals under the orders of a magistrate. We hope the information which we have received is not correct.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th September, 1906.

Malpractices of the police at Bijnor.

31. The editor of the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 24th September, says that the Sub-Inspector of Afzalgarh in the Bijnor district is getting into public disfavour owing to his extorting money from people residing in his circle, and with his subordinates for refusing to share with them the money so extorted. He cites a particular instance in which the Sub-Inspector is charged with having extorted a sum of one thousand rupees from certain persons whom he threatened to send up under the bad livelihood sections, and suggests that he deserves to be dealt with severely.

ADVOCATE,
27th September, 1906.

The police of Benares in connection with the last lunar eclipse and the Ramlila.

32 A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of 27th September, says that the muncipality made the arrangements for the lunar eclipse, and that the police was in no way responsible for anything that had happened.

In connection with the Ramlila affair, the police did not create any dissension among the parties. Certain persons grew jealous of Chanudat Byas, the moving spirit of the Ramlila, and filed a civil suit with a view to get rid of him altogether. The case was dismissed, and arrangements were then made for an affray between the parties, and the District Magistrate becoming apprised of it in time, threatened to stop the Lilla. Repeated endeavours on the part of the public and the local authorities to bring about an amicable settlement having failed the city Inspector Muhammad Taiyab took the parties before the District Magistrate, and it was agreed upon that the parties would not come to a strike this year, and that the ultimate decision would rest with the civil court. The correspondent gives credit to Inspector Muhammad Taiyab for his strenuous efforts in maintaining the prestige of the Ramlila, and with it the sanctity of the Hindu religion.

SHRI RAGHAVENDRA,
September, 1906.

Pump water-supply in Allahabad.

34. The editor of the Shri Rághavendra (Allahabad), for September, complains of the water-supply from pumps in Allahabad between certain hours only, though the public have to pay water-tax for the whole day. He points out that this is a source of great public inconvenience, and steps should be taken to supply water at all hours of the day.

ARYA MITRA,
24th September, 1906.

Repair of drains in Agra.

35. The editor of the Árya Mitra (Agra), expresses his extreme regret in its issue of the 24th September, at the refusal of the municipality to repair the drains of Gokulpura for want of sufficient funds in spite of the fact that the application of the residents of that quarter was backed by the Civil Surgeon.

(e)—Education.

GAUHAR-I-SHAHWAR,
September, 1906.

Mr. Ross Mahmud.

36. The Gauhar-i-Shahwár (Lucknow), for September, says with reference to the favour conferred by His Honour Sir James Digges LaTouche in sending Mr. Ross Mahmud to England at the cost of the State, that persons placed under such deep obligations cannot but remain attached to Government interests all their lives, and can render invaluable services. The editor says, that His Honour has rendered private assistance to a number of respectable families, but such noble deeds cannot properly be undertaken by private enterprise, and it is highly desirable that Government should interest itself in really respectable families which have lost their former prosperity. He points out that a number of respectable families in Lucknow and elsewhere in the United Provinces are also deserving of Government support.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
20th September, 1906.

The Normal School at Allahabad.

37. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 20th September, says a correspondent writes that, out of 120 students of the local Normal School, 76 have left owing to their alleged ill-treatment by the Headmaster. It appears that the Headmaster has an offensive way of speaking to the students, who made a representation to Mr. De la Fosse, who visited the schools and gave good advice to both the Headmaster and the students. But things apparently went from bad to worse, for a large number of the boys have left the school, and the remaining forty-four may also follow. An inquiry should be made to put an end to the strike.

ARYA MITRA,
24th September, 1906.

The appointment of the Director of Public Instruction.

38. The editor of the Árya Mitra (Agra), of 24th September, says that the Secretary of State has done justice to the Education Department by excluding civilians from the office of the Director of Public Instruction, but he is afraid that Lord Curzon's policy may again be reverted to, if we have another Viceroy who is partial to civilians.

TUHFA-I-HIND,
25th September, 1906.

National Universities in India.

39. The Tuhfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of 25th September, says that Indians generally are beginning to feel the need for a National University, that Sir Syed Ahmad could not give practical effect to his views for want of sufficient funds, that the Bengalis have now established a National University of their own, and that the Hindus in the United Provinces are making a move in the same direction under the auspices of the Central Hindu College. The editor suggests that every attempt should be made to impress the public with its usefulness, so that they may come forward to give the movement their full support and sympathy.

HINDUSTANI,
26th September, 1906.

The Kakori school, Lucknow.

40. A correspondent in the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of 26th September, points out that the Kakori school has been showing bad results for the last two or three years, and is going from bad to worse owing to the inattention and racial prejudices of the members of the managing committee. He invites the attention of the Deputy Inspector of Schools to it, points out that Government aid is considerably larger than the sum contributed by private enterprise, and that racial prejudices should therefore not be allowed by the Education department to influence the members in the management of this public institution.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th September,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

44. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 24th September, says that the several speakers at the anniversary of the Kayasth Union Club, Bareilly, dwelt at considerable length on the importance of the swadeshi movement, and approved of the attitude adopted by Babu Surendra Nath Banerji and other Congress leaders. Munshi Asghar Ali, B.A., LL. B., Vakil and Honorary Magistrate, who presided over the meeting, though admitting the usefulness of the swadeshi movement, disapproved of the extreme views of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji as calculated to spread disaffection. He also exhorted the students not to dabble in politics, and to devote themselves entirely to their studies. The recitations at the meeting which took the form of a drama were in keeping with the advanced views of the swadeshi agitators. The Principal, it is alleged, has been asked by the Superintendent of Police to furnish the name of the author of this drama.

SAHIFA,
19th September,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

45. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of 19th September, says that the swadeshi movement has become the general topic of the day, and that the Hindus who are its prime movers take particular interest in it. The editor says that a perusal of newspapers confirms the belief that responsible officers of Government oppose this movement, and that its support is calculated to displease Government servants and the Anglo-Indian community. The movement is, to all intents and purposes, calculated to promote the exclusive interests of the Hindus, and he therefore suggests the desirability of the Muhammadans keeping themselves aloof from this seditious enterprise. The Hindus, he goes on to say, seek their help only when their own interests are concerned, and leave their Muhammadan brethren to suffer all alone when a calamity befalls them. The mutiny of 1857 is a remarkable instance of this sort when, though the Hindus were the prime movers, the Muhammadans were the chief sufferers. The editor then multiplies instances from ancient History in support of his view, that faithlessness and disloyalty are characteristic of the Hindus, and exhorts his Muhammadan brethren to be on their guard against their trickery and deception.

The swadeshi movement.

46. The Jásus (Agra), of 21st September, deprecates the attitude of the Rohilkhand Gazette in attempting to dissuade Muhammadans from co-operating with Hindus in promoting the swadeshi movement. It is highly desirable that the advantages of the swadeshi movement should be impressed strongly on the public mind, and that the Indian Press should take an active part in furthering its cause. The country is deplorably backward in indigenous arts and industries, and it is the duty of every Indian to give them an impetus in every possible way, knowing as he does that all sorts of obstacles are thrown in the way of higher education, and that the superior service is practically closed to him.

The same paper also notes that a swadeshi meeting attended by about six thousand men was held at Belanganj in Agra on 16th September last, that the meeting was presided over by Mr. Saiyad Haidar Raza, barrister-at-law, who expatiated on the advantages of the movement, and exhorted the Muhammadans to make common cause with the Hindus in giving it their support.

The swadeshi movement in Lucknow.

47. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 23rd September, says :—The movement in favour of swadeshi sugar is strong in chauk. On Thursday the sweetmeat-seller known as Agarwala sold away his stock of sweets and preserves prepared with foreign sugar by public auction and he and a number of other dealers have taken a vow not to touch foreign sugar any more. It is proposed to open new shops dealing with only country-made sugar.

Swadeshism at Muttra.

48. A correspondent in the Citizen (Allahabad), of 24th September, says:—The recent visit of Pandit Dindayal Sharma to Muttra has resulted in much good. Foreign sugar has been completely wiped out of the market. All classes of the community, the Muhammadans included, have not only made a vow to eschew foreign sugar but many practical steps have already been taken so as to render the further consumption of the same impossible. The total quantity of sugar in the market, amounting to some two thousand and five hundred bags, has been sent away, at no inconsiderable loss, to other places. The shops have been washed down and cleansed. Big signboards, announcing in bold Nagri characters, the sale of Deshi sugar, hang on almost all the shops. The shop-keepers have bound themselves in considerable sums not to use the foreign sugar.

Are not these the unmistakeable signs of the times? Let it not be understood that it is by working only upon the religious scruples of the people that this result has been obtained. The people are awakening to the understanding that the use of foreign articles means so much loss to poor India, that by avoiding the consumption of foreign sugar they would further their own industry. This is no small lesson to learn for the masses.

The conduct of the officials has throughout been praiseworthy. No "Fullerism" has been resorted to, though monster mass meetings have been held on several days.

An Industrial Exhibition was recently opened at Brindaban under the auspices of the Raja Sahib of Hathras. Numerous articles, most of them locally made, were exhibited for several days in the palatial residence of the Raja, who deserves to be congratulated upon the keen interest he takes in Indian industry.

The swadeshi movement.

49. A correspondent in the Citizen (Allahabad), of 24th September, says that the public expenditure shows a steady tendency to rise, and with it the taxes. The condition of the masses is growing from bad to worse. The Bengalis have been driven of late to adopt the policy of passive resistance as a principle of their political creed, while the rest of India has assumed the attitude more or less of a mere looker-on. The change in the public opinion of Bengal has not come a day too soon, and the leading men of other provinces should in the meanwhile think more of reviving our fast decaying industries than of mere political concessions, and, until they have set our industries on a sound footing, they should preach the swadeshi cult, in season and out of season if they mean to be anything higher than mere agents to dispose of goods manufactured in far off lands.

OUDH AKHBAR,
25th September, 1906.

The Partition of Bengal.

50. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 25th September, says that the boycott has caused considerable loss to British trade, that it is being extended to all foreign articles, and that it is to be feared that the employés in Government offices, and in the Police Department, will strike work when a suitable opportunity offers itself. This will produce very injurious results all over the country, and will tend to weaken the hands of Government and of foreign merchants. The Government can no doubt put this conduct down by force, but repressive measures will not be able to overcome the secret strife in the public mind. The circumstances surrounding Indian social life are calculated to facilitate union and strikes, and even selfish men will be obliged to join the social boycott. It is admitted by our Government that a refusal to make just and necessary concessions to the people will produce injurious results, and it is to be hoped that Government will set aside the Partition of Bengal, or do something to place the entire population speaking the Bengali dialect under one ruler. The hopes entertained by Babu Romesh Chandar Dutt lead one to make such inferences, but any fresh application to the Secretary of State will be injurious, though certain of our leaders advocate this view. The proceeding of the Bengal Landholders' Association, and the resolution passed at Comillah and telegraphed to the Bande Mataram, show that new vigour and strength has been in spired in Indians, and that it will be wrong to make any further representation under the present circumstances to the Secretary of State.

1906.

The Golden Bengal.

51. The Qulqul (Bijnor), of 17th September, considers the existence of the "Golden Bengal" to be the outcome of the imagination of the Englishman. The editor says that the conduct of Indians in demanding the rights promised to them in the Queen's Proclamation has embittered the feelings between them and the Anglo-Indian community, whose passion has got the better of their judgment, and led them to suggest repression. He suggests that it will be a great political mistake to denounce loyal subjects as disloyal.

URDU-I-MUALLA,
September, 1906.

The Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal.

52. The editor of the Urdu-i-Mualla (Aligarh), for September, says that the Bengalis cannot be blamed for rejoicing at the resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller after ten months' of his tyrannical and oppressive rule, that the Muhammadans should not depend upon individual favour for their wellbeing and prosperty, and that they should unite as a nation to achieve their ends, instead of having recourse to flattery.

There is no harm in their speaking out freely if the Partition of Bengal has actually proved beneficial to their interests, but it is extremely mean on their part to oppose the swadeshi movement merely in the hope that their action will please Europeans, or to be gratified at the treatment accorded by Sir Bampfylde Fuller to the Bengalis. These actions have lowered the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal considerably in the public estimation.

Hindus and Muhammadans. An objectionable advertisement.

53. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of 20th September, says with reference to an advertisement "Wanted a Muhammadan with entrance qualification on Rs. 50 for the head clerkship of the Bara Banki municipality" appearing of late in the Advocate, that the purpose of the perpetration of this gross invidious distinction in the public service could have been served even without thus openly violating the laws of decency, and that such reprehensible conduct, which drags in the Hindu and Muhammadan racial question in unimportant local affairs, should elicit a strong protest from the public. The correspondent invites the attention of the authorities, who presumably are quite ignorant and have no hand whatever in the enunciation of the new policy at Bara Banki, to the advertisement in question.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th September,
1906.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

54. The Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of 26th September, says that Indian newspapers can do a good deal towards improving the strained relations between the Hindus and the Muhammadans, but some of them seem to be under the impression that their attempt in this direction will be looked upon with disfavour by such of the district authorities as base their administration on the principle of "divide and conquer." Certain others again think that the Hindus are to blame for keeping the Muhammadans out of Government service, while they themselves are monopolizing the several departments, and are led in consequence to write inflammatory articles which go to widen the gulf between the two communities. They do not seem to think that the appointments are conferred chiefly by European officers, and that they have the same opportunities of doing good to their community as the Hindus have to favour theirs. They attribute everything calculated to injure Muhammadan interests to the influence of the Hindus, and lie in wait for an opportunity to blame them in season and out of season. The leaders of public opinion are all agreed in thinking that the progress and the prosperity of the country, nay the very stability of British rule in India, depends on union between Hindus and Muhammadans : still it is seen that selfish reformers and leaders do not hesitate to spread discord, and the interchange of abusive language has become an article of faith amongst Hindu and Muhammadan editors and proprietors of the vernacular press.

The editor expresses his high satisfaction at learning that both the Hindus and Muhammadans of Gorakhpur have combined and passed a vote of censure on such of the Anglo-Indian papers as try to sow seeds of discord between these two communities.

MUSAFIR,
23rd September,
1906.

The strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

55. The Musáfir (Agra), of 23rd September, says that the feelings between Hindus and Muhammadans are so strained that union between them is almost an impossibility. There are, however, some so-called political leaders who will do anything to ingratiate themselves with Muhammadans. The editor remarks that every one knows what assistance the Muhammadans have given to the Hindus in political movements, that they have now arranged to represent their grievances to the Viceroy through a deputation of their national leaders, and that they will most probably request that the seat offered to Mr. Gokhale in the Council of the Secretary of State, and which will probably be given to Mr. R. C. Dutt, be set apart for Mr. Ameer Ali, that a specified number of seats be set apart for Muhammadans in the Legislative Councils, and that they should be accorded the same treatment all over India, as was given to them by Sir Bampfylde Fuller in Eastern Bengal. The editor concludes by warning the Hindu leaders lest they should take too long to come to definite conclusions in this matter.

MUSAFIR,
23rd September, 1906.

Causes leading to the strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

56. The Musáfir (Agra), of 23rd September, says that the present strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans are to be attributed to the extreme views of persons who are ready to continually find fault with the policy of Government, and also of those to whom every act of the people smacks of sedition.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
20th September, 1906.

Mr. Rashid's letter from America and his views about the Muhammadans of India.

57. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of 20th September, contains a letter from Mr. Rashid showing how matters are discussed in America, and pointing out that the women there after a protracted contest have obtained the right of giving votes at elections. On the other hand he says that the Indian Musalmans have not ever been able to form definite opinions as to their having a right to take a share in political matters, and that they do not take a lesson from the Hindus who have benefited by political agitation. He learns, from an interchange of thought with the Hindus in America, that flattery and dependence on the will of the rulers do not avail anything. He thinks that the Government does not regard Muhammadans as loyal and faithful owing to their passive submission, for if this were the case they would be given arms. He points out that foreign Governments do not have any respect for the obsequious attitude of the Indians, that the views expressed by Mr. Bryan, the vice-president of the United States, are fully applicable to India and the Indians, and that the Indians are playing the part of an enemy towards their country. He then points out that American progress is due entirely to the union of the Americans.

RAHBAR,
21st September, 1906.

Duty of the public in opposing unlawful orders.

58. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 21st September, while observing that the public are bound to oppose unlawful acts and orders just in the same way as they are bound to carry out lawful orders, refers to a late illegal order of the judge of Burdwan forbidding vakils and others to drive on certain roads within the court compound, says that the judge could not enforce it as the bar proved too strong for him. Had the bar however allowed him to have his own way in this matter, it would have encouraged him to adopt similar attitude in other matters as well. The public should be ever ready to check high-handedness on the part of officials.

RIYAZ UL-AKHBAR,
20th September, 1906.

The native and the Anglo-Indian press of India.

59. The editor of the Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), says in its issue of 20th September, that there seems no reason why the Gorakhpur public should have considered it necessary to hold a public meeting with a view to cement the relations between Hindus and Muhammadans, that the relations there are already friendly, and such as could be desired, and that the tone of some of the papers in Bengal is no less calculated to create disunion between the two communities than that of certain Anglo-Indian papers, whose tone was protested against and censured.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th September, 1906.

Messrs. Bryan and Carnegy on the present situation in India.

60. The editor of the Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), in its issue of the 26th September, invites the attention of the British Government to the views expressed by Mr. Bryan and Mr. Carnegy, who have made a careful study of the present situation in India. The editor quotes passages from an article contributed by Mr. Carnegy in the Nineteenth Century, pointing out that no evil results can be apprehended, if the British policy guides the present agitation in a proper manner, and that the policy of Britain should be to confer self-government on India, as has been done heretofore in Canada and Australia, but that if this is not done the scenes of the American war will be re-enacted in India.

The editor thinks that the picture has been somewhat overwrought, that a civil war in India is an impossibility, that the British Government understands the present situation very well, and will very gladly confer on the Indians the rights and privileges for which they are prepared, without being at all influenced by the views of a certain section of the Anglo-Indian Press which is doing its best to injure the feelings of the Indians and to alienate the sympathies of Englishmen.

He then points out that the Indians no longer look upon the British rule in India as foreign rule, and that they cannot be blind to the blessings it has inaugurated, but that it is necessary that Government should take a step forward.

HINDUSTANI,
26th September, 1906.

Separation of executive and judicial functions.

61. The editor of the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of 26th September, referring to the views of the Pioneer as to the present impracticability of separating the judiciary from the executive, says that, if it is intended to repress the Bengalis, there is no reason why the long delayed reform should be withheld from the rest of the country, and urges that, as it is 22 years since Lord Dufferin held out a promise to effect this reform, it is high time that Government introduced it soon.

63. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 24th September, while reproducing an article on the way of combating the plague from the Gaelic American, says that the English Government is doing nothing towards increasing the vitality of the people, and finding out the means to better their pecuniary state, which alone can improve hygienic conditions, in the country and therefore it follows that the Government does nothing to root out the plague.

The Tuhfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of 25th September, expresses public satisfaction at the abolition of quarantine rules, and suggests that the orders making the purchase of return tickets compulsory for pilgrims going to Hedjaz, may also be set aside as it prevents them from going to other places, or from visiting friends who happen to be on their way.

INDIAN STANDARD,
17th September, 1906.

Jamalpur outrage and the Englishman.

65. The Indian Standard (Allahabad), of 17th September, received on 24th September, says:—A correspondent writes:—Outrages and massacres of the innocents are the order of the day. Scarcely had we recovered from the shock of the Barisal outrage, it becomes our painful duty to notice the disaster which has taken place at Jamalpur. The outrage is shocking, galling and revolting to the noblest feelings of human nature. The outrage is unprecedented and unparalleled in the annals of British Rule in India. It staggers humanity. Compared with this, the tyrannical and most despotic rule and dark days of Aurangzeb dwindle into insignificance. The ugly part of the affair was that the message conveying the heartrending news of the disaster was even refused by the Telegraph office, and that a messenger had to be despatched from Jamalpur to Calcutta for this purpose. We learn that eight workmen while proceeding to the meeting of the Railway Union were shot by a European sergeant. All honour to the President of the Railway Union who by his tact and moderation has maintained order. Had it not been for his timely interference, the matter would have terminated in a terrible catastrophe, and the infuriated mob, numbering about 1,500 Railway workmen, would have crushed the sergeant to pieces. We are overwhelmed with feelings for the massacre of innocent workmen. Such a diabolical outrage has not been perpetrated within the memory of the oldest of us now living. However, we are glad to notice two satisfactory features of the situation—one is the sympathetic and conciliatory attitude of the District Magistrate and the other the institution of criminal proceedings against MacMillan and Finlayson, the heroes of this awful tragedy. It is a satisfaction to us to observe that the magistrate of Jamalpur does not belong to the great race cf the missionaries of the type of a sainted Emerson and Christ-like Rev. Father Kemp who have embalmed their names in the hearts of the people, and adorned the pages of the history of Barisal. The magistrate has kindly consented to meet in conference the counsel and representatives of the workmen. He granted an interview to the counsel, Mr. R. C. Sen, barrister-at-law, and to the Secretary, Railway Union, Babu Premtosh Bose. The Englishman is advising the Railway authorities not to recognise the Railway Union, and urges that they should not be dictated by the Indian staff. The Englishman must remember that this kind of harsh uncouth and violent language embitters the feelings of the subject race, and creates ill-feeling in their minds. It does more harm than good. The Indian staff asked for nothing but only demanded justice. The Englishman and the Railway authorities must remember that the foundation of an organisation which can muster fifteen thousand railway workmen at its meetings, is built upon a solid rock, and cannot easily be shaken by any attitude however hostile it may be on the part of the authorities. Matters have taken such a serious turn that the workmen and clerks will not resume work unless guns and other restrictions are removed, and those diabolical monsters and spiders of hell MacMillan and Finlayson are prosecuted. It is also amusing to note that the authorities in obedience to the dictates of their so-called conscience and love of fair play and truth, and not in obedience to the dictates of the Indian staff, to use the noble language of the Englishman, are setting up a plea of rioting in self-defence. Force can never keep a subject race under control. The British Empire must be built upon the strong and impregnable bulwark of the hearts and affections of the people. We claim from England, the august mother of all nations of the present day, the rights and privileges of free-citizenship as a matter of right and not as a matter of favour. We are no longer the conquered subjects of England but the incorporated citizens of a free Empire. The Railway authorities should remove guns and all other restrictions and prosecute Finlayson and MacMillan, the disturbers of peace. Nothing will satisfy the workmen except this condescension on the part of the authorities. This is a reasonable demand and we hope the authorities will listen to the prayer of 15,000 workmen and after making an immediate enquiry in the matter will bring the offenders to justice.

TUHFA-I-HIND,

66. The Tuhfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of 25th September, referring to the incident relating to Dr. Tajuddin's wife and children which was reproduced also in the Oudh Akhbár of 23rd September, says that the Railway Police should be able to stop the commission of such offences, that the railway companies should employ females for attending to female carriages, and that special care should be taken to employ men of good moral character, and to remove those who are even suspected of having loose morals.

The clerks attached to the Traffic department on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

JASUS,
21st September,
1906.

67. A correspondent in the Jásus (Agra), of 21st September, says that the Traffic Department is the only source of income in railway concerns, and it is sad to find that the clerks in this department of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway line have come chiefly under reduction. They have been sitting without work for sometime and yet their repeated applications have received no consideration, though fresh hands are being entertained from time to time. The correspondent, however, says that this state of affairs will not continue long, and the misfortunes of these hard-worked clerks are sure to come to an end as soon as Mr. Pope resumes charge of his duties.

RAHBAR,
21st September,
1906.

The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 21st September, expresses similar views regarding the unfortunate employés who have come under reduction.

The clerks in the Traffic department of the Moradabad Division.

JASUS,
21st September,
1906.

68. A correspondent in the Jásus (Agra), of 21st September, says that the Traffic Superintendent of Moradabad has of late been making wholesale transfers of his subordinates on grounds of relationship, but there seems no reason why special favour should have been shown to certain clerks, so that certain stations are practically manned entirely by these favourites and their near relatives. The editor points out also that the inhabitants of these Provinces have a preferential claim, and any undue favour shown to the Punjabis is sure to elicit criticism and to raise suspicion. He also notes that such of the clerks as ask for promotion are called into headquarters, examined and reduced or dismissed on the ground of inefficiency.

RAHBAR,

Catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

69. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 21st September, says in an open letter to Lala Madan Mohan Lal, contractor, that the things sold are stale, that the prices charged are much higher than those payable in the bazar, and that they are under-weighed by the confectioners selling them. The editor suggests that greater attention should be paid to the comforts of the passengers and that they should be dealt with politely. He concludes with the remark that he has compiled a pamphlet, and, in case Lala Madan Mohan does not mend his ways and improve the existing arrangements, he will expose him by sending copies to the Railway Board and the Government. He also points out that the railway authorities will not be exonerated by the mere assertion that the present arrangements are not unsatisfactory.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,

The Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Gorakhpur), of 8th September, received on 22nd September, expresses its satisfaction at the steps taken by the Board with a view to provide better arrangements as evinced by the inquiries now addressed to the several lines.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,

Catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand and Bengal-North-Western Railways.

70. The Awáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of 24th September, invites the attention of the Government Railway Board and the authorities of the Oudh and Rohilkhand and Bengal North-Western Railways to the very unsatisfactory catering arrangements, and consequent inconvenience and difficulties experienced by the travelling public, and requests that early steps be taken with a view to remedy the evils existing in their administration.

OUDH PUNCH,

Catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

71. The Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of 27th September, says with reference to the numerous complaints regarding the catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway that the present arrangements are certainly far superior to those that existed a few years back, and that the complaints in question are due mostly to the fact that there are persons who cannot get over their habit of posing as censors and finding fault with everything that comes to their notice.

72. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of 20th September, says from personal experience that there are no travelling ticket-checkers to prevent third class passengers from getting into the intermediate class, that this is a serious inconvenience, and expresses a hope that Mr. Pope's successor will be as ready to listen to all reasonable complaints as Mr. Pope was.

SITARA-I-HIND,

The contractors on the Rohilkhand-Kumaun Railway.

73. The Sitára-i-Hind (Moradabad), of 20th September, says that the contractors on the Rohilkhand-Kumaun Railway which is under construction have sustained heavy losses owing to the bad faith of those in charge of the construction, in refusing to measure in their presence the work done by the contractors, who claimed having done much more work than was shown to their credit. The result was that a large number of purbiyas who were working on the line had to go away without a settlement of accounts, and the authorities in charge of the work have been compelled to send out men to canvass for contractors.

ARYA MITRA,
24th September,
1906.

The attitude of the East Indian Railway authorities towards strikers and the bad work of Eurasians.

74. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of 24th September, cites instances of loss that the East Indian Railway is suffering owing to the ignorance of rules and rates of fares on the part of Eurasian employés who have supplanted the Indians at strike, and deplores the attitude of the authorities in not making proper concessions to their old Indian staff who have struck work.

VII.—POST OFFICE.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
14th and 21st
September, 1906.

The Moradabad Post Office.

75. The editor of the Rafiq Punch (Moradabad), says, in its combined issue of 14th and 21st September, that the letters and other articles are delivered after considerable delay owing to the unbusiness-like habits of the local Postmaster, and invites the attention of the Postmaster General to the matter.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
20th September, 1906.

Loss of newspapers in transit.

76. The editor of the Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), in its issue of the 20th September, says that there are constant complaints about the loss of newspapers in transit and that the evil can be remedied only if the several papers that are to be sent to one post office, after being labelled and stamped according to the established practice, are put into one packet and addressed to the Post-master of the town of destination and another stamp affixed and receipt obtained for the same. The distribution in that case will devolve on the Post-office of delivery, but every chance of loss in transit will be avoided.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th September, 1906.

Complaints against the Head Post office at Moradabad.

77. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 24th September, referring to the complaints published in the Rahbar and Jásus against the Head Post-master at Moradabad, says that the complaints were unfounded, and asks the editors of papers so complaining to publish a withdrawal of their previous remarks on the subject.

INDIAN STANDARD,

Sati at Lucknow.

78. The Indian Standard (Allahabad), of 3rd September, received on 24th September, says:—If the Hindu society has survived the ravages of time, and has outlived so many attacks upon it, it is because of the exemplary character and unparalleled devotion of Hindu women to their husbands. Though legislation has forbidden it yet we hear now and then accounts of true cases of sati. Babu Jogendra Chandra Rai of Gariffa (Naihati, Eastern Bengal State Railway) an overseer was living at Lucknow with his wife. The poor fellow died of heart disease. The wife of the deceased shed not a drop of tear, and consoled her children and advised them as to how they should get on in the world. Late at midnight she dressed herself in her husband's clothes and soaking them with kerosine oil put fire in them and burned herself. These examples are worthy of imitation and should be followed by the womenkind of modern India.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
12th and 20th September, 1906.

The Sabathu cow-killing.

79. The editor of the Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), in its combined issue of 12th and 20th September, gives details of the Sabathu cow-killing and then suggests that Government should send out vegetarian soldiers to serve in India.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
20th September, 1906.

Salaries of chaplains.

80. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 20th September, says that the State has its own religion and is entitled to maintain its own ministers. Nor is it proper for the followers of another religion to say anything about them. But there is a little despatch from the Secretary of State to the Government of India about the salaries of chaplains about which a word might be said from the taxpayer's point of view. To be strictly just and conscientious, Christian missionaries and ministers should decline to be paid out of monies realised from heathens and infidels like Hindus and Muhammadans. A certain Lord Bishop of Calcutta was scandalised to hear that military bands played at Hindu marriages. He said that Christians should not take part in heathen marriages, and so Christian military music was stopped, for a time, at Hindu marriages. It never occurred to that great dignitary of the Church to inquire who paid him his large salary, and whether it was right for him to maintain himself at the cost of heathens and infidels. Putting this subtle issue on one side, we find that the Government of India recommended an increase in the scale of salaries given to chaplains and the proposal has been promptly sanctioned by the Secretary of State. The starting salary will be Rs. 480 and senior chaplains will get Rs. 1,000 a month. This is better than even the Civil Service, where the starting salary is only Rs. 400. We do not also know whether additional work has been put on chaplains, and anyhow a salary should not be a great object to a man engaged in the service of God. To the heathen and the unbeliever it seems that the work of the Church can be carried on by missionaries as well as by fat salaried chaplains, and when the numerous missions and missionary colleges in this country get fine devoted men on such small salaries, it seems sheer extravagance to pay such large salaries to chaplains who, as a body, are inferior to missionaries in religious zeal, ardour, and sacrifice. Some people may be inclined to make a comparison between the sleek and well-fed Brahmins and Pandas, and the double-chinned well-groomed chaplains on a thousand rupees a month.

ADVOCATE,
20th September, 1906.

Increased pay of senior chaplains.

81. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 20th September, says that the Secretary of State has abolished exchange compensation allowance and sanctioned an increased scale of pay for senior chaplains. No reason has been ascribed for the increase. This is how the disestablishment question in India is treated. Instead of decrease we have an increase in an expenditure which should not fall on State funds contributed by non-christians.

ZUL QARNAIN,
21st September, 1906.

The mosque at the Budaun railway station.

82. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of 21st September, says that the railway authorities have built a fencing wall just in front of the mosque at the Badaun railway station, which obstructs the view of the mosque and of certain shops built for the maintenance of the mosque. A Muhammadan deputation has interviewed the Commissioner of the Division, and a memorial has been submitted to the local Government to intercede with the railway authorities in this behalf.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th September, 1906.

The mosque at the Budaun railway station.

83. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 24th September, expresses views similar to those in the Zul Qarnain (Budaun) of the 21st September, regarding the erection of the railway enclosure wall in front of the mosque at the railway station at Budaun, and hopes that the matter will receive due consideration.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
14th and 21st September, 1906.

Indian Muhammadans and the teachings of Mirza Qadyani.

84. A correspondent in the Rafiq Punch (Moradabad), in its combined issue of 14th and 21st September, received on 24th September, exhorts the Muhammadans to adhere to the tenets of Islam, and to keep aloof from Mirza Qadyani, who is doing incalculable harm to their religion by inculcating a modified form of the teachings of Muhammad, and setting himself up as a prophet. The correspondent calls him an anti-Christ, and asks God to have mercy on him.

SHRI RAGHAVENDRA,
September, 1906.

Effect of missionary enterprise on Eastern countries.

85. The Shri Rághavendra (Allahabad), for September, says that Christians make it a point to tell Eastern nations, when they visit their country, that the latter are enveloped in darkness, and that they go into the East to spread the light of religion and Western civilization. The editor says that this, however, is not a fact, that sin increases considerably with their advent, and cites the increase of gambling amongst the Nagas of Assam as an apt illustration in support of his views. He is of opinion that the countries in the East have in the long run suffered from missionary enterprise, and the missionaries should therefore be ashamed to say that they bring light to dispel darkness.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
12th and 20th September, 1906.

Indian students in Japan.

86. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), in its combined issue of 12th and 20th September, says that there are 52 Indian students at present in Japan, who having overcome all religious and social prejudices are living and boarding together like brethren.

ADVOCATE,
27th September, 1906.

The lunar eclipse at Benares.

87. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of 27th September, requests, with reference to a letter in its issue of the 16th September by an "Eye-witness," to be informed of the names of the Deputy Magistrates alleged to be present at the lunar eclipse, and asks also to be favoured with the names of the ghats at which they were present.

SURMA-I-ROZGAR,
1st October, 1906.

The Sultan of Turkey.

1. THE Surma-i-Rozgár (Agra), of 1st October, says that any attempt of the Sunnis to address the Sultan of Turkey as Amir-ul-Momnín is calculated to injure Shia susceptibilities, and should be discountenanced. The editor for one, would sacrifice everything for the Sultan of Turkey, but thinks that the same respect is due from him to both the Sultan, and the Shah of Persia, and he cannot address either as Amir-ul-Momnín.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
1st October, 1906.

The illness of the Sultan of Turkey.

2. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of 1st October, is disturbed to learn from the London Times that the Sultan of Turkey is suffering from a cancer in the kidney, a disease which is looked upon as fatal, and asks if the Holy Ghost has inspired the Times about the incurable nature of the Sultan's complaint, and expresses a hope that the Sultan will be cured speedily, even if the news of his having cancer be true.

ARYA MITRA,
1st October, 1906.

The present situation in Europe.

3. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of 1st October, says that the Czar has fled to Poland, that Christian Russians have no scruples regarding Jewish massacres, that there are other European countries likewise verging on anarchy, and that the European Powers, who boast of spreading peace and prosperity, cannot remove the unrest in their midst, while all the same they continue making encroachments in Asia.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
4th October, 1906.

Asiatic view about Japan.

4. Referring to the articles in the Pioneer on Fauji Amin's letter, the Indian People, (Allahabad), writes in its issue of 4th October, that it is the firm conviction of all Asiatics, and the sneers of Anglo-Indian papers will but confirm it, that there is no Power in Europe or America that can withstand the Japanese. After the Boer War it is useless to compare the puissance of the British Army (Gurkhas and Sikhs excluded) with that of the Japanese Army. There are no armies in Europe that could have stormed the heights of Nanshan or stormed Port Arthur, putting entirely on one side the matchless exploits of Admiral Togo, to whom it is scarcely any compliment to compare him with Nelson. It is not the hero alone but the man also that has to be considered, but both as a man and hero Togo is greater than Nelson.

(b).—Home.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
1st October 1906.

The views of His Highness the Prince of Wales and the attitude of local authorities towards Indians.

5. The Kanauj Punch (Kanauj), of 1st October, says that the loyalty of the Indians has been highly gratifying to His Highness the Prince of Wales, as evinced by his views expressed after his recent visit to India, but the local authorities still continue to slight them, and it is to be regretted that their attitude is not brought to the notice of the Sovereign.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
1st October, 1906.

Mr. Morley's attitude towards India.

6. The Kanauj Punch (Kanauj), of 1st October, says that the sympathetic attitude of Mr. Morley, as evinced in his budget speech, indicates his anxiety to promote Indian interests, and that has been a source of public satisfaction in England, where people are of opinion that higher appointments should be conferred upon both Europeans and Indians without any distinction.

RAHBAR,
28th September, 1906.

The swadeshi movement in connection with the anniversary meeting of the Union Club, Bareilly.

7. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 28th September, says that the success of the swadeshi movement is provoking antagonism in official quarters in certain districts, and that, in Bareilly for instance the boycott of foreign sugar, which was considerably facilitated by the magnanimous contribution of six thousand rupees given by a Seth to repair such loss as confectioners might suffer by disposing of their stock of foreign sugar and confections made therefrom, has caused great annoyance to the District authorities, and that it has been evidenced by their imposing a fine of Rs. 50 per head on certain of the swadeshi leaders in a very trifling matter.

The editor then refers to another incident which has caused much consternation all over Bareilly. The members of the Union Club consisting chiefly of college students gave a dramatic performance to entertain the public present at the anniversary meeting. In this India was represented as on old woman weeping along the roadside, while her hungering sons, who were graduates and undergraduates, were seated beside her and bemoaning lack of employment. Japan then happening to pass along, asked the decrepit woman what the matter was with her, and, finding she was his long lost mother India, gave his brothers a note of introduction to America. America then proposed to give them technical education, and they returned home at once as they were in immediate need of work. Again on their way back they sat bewailing their misfortunes in a jungle when an angel descended from heaven and took them before God, who said that His Mercy will visit India only when they make united efforts, act up to the dictates of justice and religion, lay aside feelings of revenge and jealousy, and when both Hindus and Muhammadans entertain fraternal love for one another, and unite in serving their Government loyally and faithfully, for British Justice renders it superior to every other Government in the world. The sons of India thereon determined to act up to the command of God. The meeting was presided over by Maulvi Asghar Ali Khan, B.A., LL. B. and attended by Deputy Collectors, Tahsildars and Police Inspectors, the Principal and the Professors and teachers of the college staff amongst others. The matter was somehow brought to the notice of the district authorities, and the Principal has now been called upon to furnish the names of the author of the drama and of those who enacted it at the meeting. The editor deplores the attitude of the district authorities and thinks there is no remedy for such ridiculous apprehensions; that every one has a right to improve his condition, that the educated public have their thoughts centred on self-improvement; and if this can be treated as sedition, every educated Indian will be liable for abetment.

RAHBAR,
28th September, 1906.

Political reform in the Indian National Congress.

8. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 28th September, supports the views expressed in a recent issue of the Tribune pointing to the necessity of departing from the course hitherto adopted by the Indian National Congress, and suggests that a continuous agitation should be maintained all over the country until the reforms sought hitherto by begging have been obtained. The editor then recapitulates the views expressed by Mr. Krishna Swami Iyer in his presidential speech at the Madras Provincial Conference, and points out that the scheme though calculated to entail an annual expenditure of about seventeen thousand rupees, is sure to lead to great political results.

DABDABA-I-SIKANDARI,
1st October, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation to the Viceroy.

9. The Dabdaba-i-Sikandari (Rampur), of 1st October, says that the secrecy with which delegates for the Muhammadan deputation to the Viceroy have been selected points to a genuine union amongst Muhammadans of different sects inhabiting various parts of India. The editor opines that the views of the deputation will be diametrically opposed to those of the Indian National Congress.

AL BASHIR,
2nd October, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation to the Viceroy.

10. Al Bashir (Etawah), of 2nd October, says that, considering that the Viceroy has accorded permission for the presentation of the proposed memorial by the Muhammadan deputations, certain prudent Congress organs have acceded that the Muhammadans may in future be allowed to have a fixed number of their representatives in the Legislative Councils, but still insist on having common voters for Hindus and Muhammadans alike. The editor says that this will enable the Hindus to secure the election of weak Muhammadans, whom they will be able to mould to suit their own interests, and cites the case of the Rangoon Municipality, where each community has the right to elect its own members in support of his contention. He also suggests that the Sweepers, Chamars, Ahirs, Khatiks Mochis, Telis and many other communities that are neither educated, nor go in for service, and are only a little better than gipsies, should be neglected in estimating the population of the Hindus.

RIYAZ-UL AKHBAR,
1st October, 1906.

The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of 1st October, says that it is true that the Muhammadans have suffered by their silence and contentment, but the step now taken in representing the needs of the Muhammadan community by sending a deputation to the Viceroy is in no way a departure from the policy of Sir Saiyad Ahmad Khan, who was the greatest politician India has ever produced. It is pointed out that the leaders of the Indian National Congress have never said or done anything to improve the prospects of the Muhammadan community, and that now that the Muhammadans have taken their case into their own hands, they should try to secure a number of seats at least in the Viceregal Council if not in all the Councils and the Municipal boards.

India through American spectacles.

INTIKHAB-I-MEERUT,
September, 1906.

11. The Intikháb-i-Meerut, for September, says that Mr. Andrew Carnegy, who is really a resident of Scotland, has, in an article contributed by him to the Nineteenth Century, pointed out that the time has come when England will confer self-government on the Indians as she has in Canada and Australia, that if repressive measures are adopted in India, the proceedings in Canada will be repeated in the history of India. The editor remarks that the Anglo-Indian press is indignant over this expression of Mr. Carnegy's views which is its usual course when it observes anything said or done to promote the interests of India.

The Civil and Military Gazette on the attitude of the Bengalis.

RAHBAR,
28th September, 1906.

12. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 28th September, says, with reference to the remarks in the Civil and Military Gazette regarding the practice of fencing to which certain young men have been incited by the stirring speeches of Babu Bipin Chander Pal in Sylhet, that this is another instance of an Anglo-Indian paper spreading alarm, on the pretext of putting Government on its guard against the hitherto cowardly Bengalis, who it is suggested are fast developing into a race of warriors. The editor points out that the subjects in most of the Native States bear arms, but no rising can be apprehended from them; and that any idea of a rising on the part of the Bengalis is quite out of the question.

The Anglo-Indian Press on the attitude of the Bengalis.

TAFRIH,
28th September, 1906.

13. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 28th September, supports the Rahbar (Moradabad), of 28th September, in condemning the attitude of the Anglo-Indian Press towards the Bengalis, in fomenting dissatisfaction and creating ungrounded apprehensions.

The attitude of the Anglo-Indian Press towards Indians.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
1st October, 1906.

14. The Kanauj Punch (Kanauj), of 1st October, deprecates the attitude of the Anglo-Indian Press in attributing strikes and everything else that is discreditable to the Indians, instead of looking upon events as the natural outcome of the needs of the country.

The suggestion of the Civil and Military Gazette about imposing restrictions on Indians.

OUDH AKHBAR,
2nd October, 1906.

15. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 2nd October, deprecates the attempt of the Civil and Military Gazette to poison the mind of the British Government by suggesting that the attitude of the Indians necessitates the revocation of the Queen's Proclamation of 1857, and the imposition of restrictions on the liberty of Indians. It is pointed out that the loyalty of the Indians has been exemplary throughout, that the King Emperor has never had occasion to think otherwise ever since the proclamation was issued by Her Majesty Queen Victoria, that only recently the Prince of Wales had personal experience of his Indian subjects, that the Congress, which the Civil and Military Gazette regards as a seditious association, was originated by Mr. Hume, and received the support of eminent British public leaders, and that the Golden Bengal to which the Lahore Anglo-Indian organ gives such prominence, has proved to be a concoction to injure Indian interests.

The Hindus and Muhammadans of India.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
3rd October, 1906.

16. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, of 3rd October, joins issue with the Hindustáni (Lucknow), and asks if one solitary instance can be pointed out where the Hindus have volunteered to join the Muhammadans in electing a Muhammadan representative for both communities, even in matters of little significance. The editor says that it is a matter of every day experience that the Hindus do not like the idea of Muhammadans being elected as representatives, and where such a course becomes inevitable they manage to secure the election of some weak-minded Muhammadan who will merge his views and the interest of his community into theirs. He then asks how the Hindus like the recent order of the Commissioner of Delhi, about the adjournment of elections there for one year, and his leaving the work in the hands of members nominated by Government.

OUDH AKHBAR,
6th October, 1906.

Patriotism.

17. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 6th October, says that Professor Parmanand, who is now in London, writes that the caste system in India has had much to do with its weakness, that the Indians excel Englishmen in attributes like contentment, self-abnegation, mercy, sympathy for their family members, purity and the like, which make a man morally great, but are sadly wanting in patriotism and unity, in which virtues Englishmen excel. The sense of patriotism, if it ever existed in India, has been very weak, and should now be strengthened in every possible way, because this alone can raise India in the scale of nations.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

EXPRESS,
27th September,
1906.

The Amir's visit to India.

18. The Express (Lucknow), of the 27th September, says that the Times believes that the Amir has had the sagacity to recognize that his position is no longer what it was in the times of the Dane Mission, and points out that it has committed a blunder which all British statesmen much regret. It is true that no great political significance may be attached to the visit, and that the imaginary danger of a Russian invasion, has almost vanished, but to say that this has lessened the value of Afghanistan as a factor in all possible international complications is too blunt not to be noticed by the sensitive Pathan. It is neither true nor polite, and want of politeness is the one thing which the Orientals, or for the matter of that, all people never forget. Such remarks, emanating as they do from a journal recognized to be the greatest and most influential newspaper in Great Britain, cannot be relished by the Afghans, and their significance will not be lost on the Amir.

OUDH AKHBAR,
29th September,
1906.

The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 29th September, suggests the desirability of the Amir's visiting the chief Muhammadan Feudatory States in India, and other great Muhammadan centres, and says that his visit to the Aligarh College will be beneficial alike to the college and to its royal visitor.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

JASUS,
28th September,
1906.

Jaipur and the editor of the Jásus.

19. The editor of the Jásus (Agra), in its issue of 28th September, holds out threats of exposing certain officials of Jaipur in case the administration of the State does not undergo a change for the better, during the next three months. He says that good government cannot be expected from a chief who spends his twenty-four hours in "eating roasted meat and drinking liquor," that no notice having been taken so far of the maladministration of the State, on his complaints in the editorial columns, it should not be understood that he will leave matters where they are, and that unless there is a change for the better by the close of the year, he will invite the attention of the authorities by publishing an English version of his paper, and if necessary by means of a pamphlet to be sent to the Government of India. The editor in another paragraph notes that the people of Jaipur are leading a very licentious life, and escape punishment as the members can exercise back-door influence on those dispensing justice.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
30th September
1906.

Rampur.

20. The Mukhbir-i-Álam (Moradabad), of 30th September, says that rumours are afloat that no minister will be appointed in Rampur, and that the administration of the State will be conducted either on the same lines as in Bhopal or by a Council to be appointed by His Highness the Nawab. The editor, being well aware of the reckless and luxurious habits of the Nawab, doubts very much if the rumour is true and remarks in passing that the death of Mansab Ali is a mystery, cites the murder of General Azim-ud-din Khan as a remarkable instance, and insinuates that serious crimes, like these, have always been perpetrated in the absence of the Nawab from Rampur, which has its own significance. He further apprehends that matters might take a serious turn owing to the presence about the Nawab of persons whose interests and personal feelings are diametrically opposed to one another.

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

AGRA AKHBAR,
28th September,
1906.

Muhammadan Judges in Indian High Courts.

21. The Agra Akhbár, of 28th September, says that Maulvi Wali-ul-Rahman, B.L., Secretary, Anjuman Islamiya, Jalpaiguri (Bengal) has issued a circular letter to Muhammadan Associations all over India, requesting them to hold meetings and pass resolutions with a view to move Government at an early date to appoint one or more Muhammadan Judges in the Indian High Courts, as the sudden death of Mr. Badruddin Tyabji leaves no member of that community on any bench of the Indian High Courts. He also points out that Muhammadans can at present expect nothing from Government without agitation.

OUDH AKHBAR,
1st October, 1906.

Muhammadan Judges in Indian High Courts.

22. The Oudh Akhbâr (Lucknow), of the 1st October, says that the Muhammadans admit their educational inferiority to the Hindus, that their earnestness, however, in holding agitation meetings to move Government to confer on them high appointments, specially Judgeships in the High Courts, is commendable, and exhorts them in conclusion to qualify themselves by strenuous efforts and to remain loyal to Government, so that agitation may become unnecessary for promoting their interests.

MUFID-I-AM,
1st October, 1906.

Appointment of Muhammadan Judges in Indian High Courts.

23. The Mufid-i-Âm (Agra), of 1st October, relying on the current of public opinion in the Indian Press, expresses a hope that Government will be pleased to confer one or more seats on the High Court bench on Muhammadans.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
30th September, 1906.

The Mukhbir-Âlam (Moradabad), of 30th September, expresses similar views on the subject.

ARYA MITRA,
1st October, 1906.

Female outrage in the Dataganj circle in Budaun.

24. A correspondent writes in the Ârya Mitra (Agra), of 1st October, that a female gadarya was brutally assaulted and raped by five men, amongst them, a village chaukidar, that she became senseless and was in consequence taken to the police station by the offending chaukidar himself to avert suspicion. The case has been committed to the Court of Sessions, and it is to be hoped that sufficiently deterrent sentences will be passed to meet the enormity of the crime.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
1st October, 1906.

Warrants of arrest against witnesses for defence in a bad livelihood case.

25. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 1st October, says that warrants have been issued for the arrest of the witnesses for defence in re Sharafat-ulla, accused, charged under section 110, Criminal Procedure Code. Amongst these are Lala Chandra Sen Seth and other respectable men, and the matter is attracting public attention in Bareilly.

(b).—Police.

ARYA PATRA,
September, 1906.

Murder by a police constable in Bareilly.

26. The Ârya Patra (Bareilly), for September, says with reference to the murder of a boy by a police constable of Garhi outpost who was badly in need of money for gambling, that this is a deplorable instance of the way in which the protectors of life and property behave towards the public, and asks how Islam can thrive if infidelity originates in Kaba.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
30th September, 1906.

Police administration in Moradabad.

27. The Mukhbir-i-Âlam (Moradabad), of 30th September, deprecates the conduct of the editor of the Sitara-i-Hind (Moradabad), regarding a theft by a police constable who has since been convicted, as showing defective police administration in Moradabad, and says that the public have realised the efficiency of the present staff of the police there, who are doing all in their power to maintain peace and order in the district.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
1st October, 1906.

The Sub-Inspector of Seohara (Bijnor).

28. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 1st October, says that Sub-Inspector Muhammad Hadi, who has recently been transferred to Bareilly, proceeded on leave immediately on joining his new district, and is now stopping at Seohara with a view to influence the witnesses in the case against him. The removal of the Head Constable writer is likewise asked for owing to his corruption.

OUDH PUNCH,
4th October, 1906.

Highway robbery on the road to the station at Lucknow.

INTIKHAB-I-MEERUT,
September, 1906.

Repair of roads in Meerut.

30. The Intikhab-i-Meerut, for September, invites the attention of the local municipality to the much needed repair of the road passing from Lala ka Bazar to the Chauraha (cross-roads) as people are much incommoded owing to the kankar having been dug from the road about six weeks back.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
28th September, 1906.

Sanitary arrangements for the prevention of plague in Gorakhpur.

31. A correspondent in the Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of 28th September, says that the Gorakhpur public are prepared to take all necessary precautions, and to keep their houses neat and clean, but they find themselves quite unable to get good work out of the sweeper class, and strong measures on the part of the municipal board are urgently needed to keep them under proper control, so as to make measures regarding the prevention of plague really effective.

RAHBAR,
28th September, 1906.

Bad roads in Moradabad.

32. A correspondent in the Rahbar (Moradabad), of 28th September, complains of the deplorable condition of the road leading from the Government School to Ram Ganga, and invites the attention of the local municipality with a view to its repair, as it is much frequented.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
28th September, 1906.

The Rafiq Punch (Moradabad), of 28th September, complains of the bad and insufficiently lighted roads throughout the municipality of Moradabad, and attributes this state of affairs to neglect of duty on the part of the Secretary.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
3rd October, 1906.

Adulteration of ghi in Agra.

33. The Nasim-i-Agra, of 3rd October, says that the municipality is quite unmindful of its duties in the matter of the sale of adulterated articles of food, in spite of the fact that an Assistant Health Officer has been appointed for the purpose; and points out that adulterated ghi in particular, consisting of fat and other deleterious substances, has been selling extensively of late.

Famine in Eastern Bengal.

35. The editor of the Sansár Mitra (Allahabad), of 2nd October, invites the attention of Government to the hard lot of the famine-stricken people in Eastern Bengal, and gives a detailed account of the straits to which the people there are reduced.

ARYA MITRA,
1st October, 1906.

The editor of the Árya Mitra (Agra), of 1st October, likewise seems very much distressed over the prevailing famine in Eastern Bengal, says that a Muhammadan attempted suicide, but failed to complete the offence through sheer weakness, and concludes with asking if Englishmen are so wanting in mercy and sympathy as to allow such a state of things to exist.

INTIKHAB-I-MEERUT.
September. 1906.

The Coronation of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji.

36. The Intikháb-i-Meerut, for September, says that there is nothing unusual about the coronation of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji to call for hostile comment from all quarters; that the coronation of Ram Chandra during the Ramlila, and of Sadhus and others on the Vyas Puja day are witnessed every year all over the country and afford no occasion for criticism.

What harm then, if Babu Surendra Nath Banerji allowed a crown of flowers to be placed on his head, or if the people who reverence him as a high class Brahmin apply the dust of his feet to their foreheads.

MUFID-I-AM,
24th September, 1906.

The Coronation of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji.

37. The Mufid-i-Ám (Agra), of 24th September, supports the views of the editor of the Nazim-ul-Hind (Lahore), who thinks that the coronation of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji and his speeches in connection with the swadeshi movement and boycott of foreign articles are calculated to spread sedition; and exhorts the Muhammadans to keep themselves aloof from the Bengali agitation lest they should fall into the same error as they did in 1857 to their own discomfort and to the detriment of their interests.

TAFRIH,
28th September, 1906.

The Coronation of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji.

38. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 28th September, expresses views similar to those reproduced from the Intikháb-i-Meerut for September.

OUDH AKHBAR,
6th October, 1906.

The Dacca Conference.

39. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 6th October, says that it is impossible to believe that certain Muhammadans of Dacca have resolved at a meeting which was attended by one Hindu that the strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans should cease, and the two communities should co-operate to establish a feeling of friendliness and harmony. It is pointed out that the vernacular press, which should be the chief factor in bringing about this much desired result, is mainly to blame, as the old feuds about Aurangzeb and Sivaji, the Partition of Bengal and other questions of a kindred nature are being discussed and given an importance which they do not deserve; that the feud between the Moghul Emperor and the Mahratta chief is a thing of the past, that the Partition of Bengal was the outcome of the policy of Government and the Muhammadans had no hand in its initiation, and that there is no occasion therefore for rejoicing over the event if it is painful to the Hindus. It is feared that the leading Muhammadans of Dacca will put on a bold front to resist the union, as there are differences between the two communities over the swadeshi movement and the distribution of appointments in Government service, and that they cannot gain their object without co-operating to secure the good wishes of Government: that if any union is to be brought about, meetings like that held in Dacca should be held all over in India. In conclusion it is very much feared that, even if such a thing should be practicable so far as Hindus and Muhammadans are concerned, the Anglo-Indian Press will all the same continue to charge the Hindus with sedition in connection with the Partition of Bengal, and the Muhammadans in connection with the present situation in Egypt.

JAI JUJHAUTIA MASIK PATRA,
February 1906.

The swadeshi movement in Behar.

40. The Jai Jujhautia Másik Patra (Mau-Ranipur, Jhansi), for February, received on 1st October, says that the swadeshi movement is gaining ground in Behar, and that not only the educated masses but the villagers also have decided upon the exclusive use of swadeshi articles.

ZAMANA,
August 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

41. Lala Lajpat Rai, Vakil, has contributed an article in the Zamana (Cawnpore), for August, wherein he says that a certain section of the Indian public is afraid to countenance the swadeshi movement owing to the attitude of the officials, who, though they do not oppose the movement openly, feel all the same that it is calculated to do immense harm to foreign trade, that some of the officials try to make out that their sympathies go with the movement, that there are certain others again who have set themselves up as its opponents openly. He is of opinion that the swadeshi movement and boycott are inseparable from one another, that it is necessary to restrict the boycott to a limited number of foreign imports in order to make the swadeshi movement an economic success, that the boycott should extend alike to articles of foreign manufacture from all countries, in order to protect the economic rights of India; but in case it is to be treated as a political force it should be directed first against English piece goods, so as to enable the British Government to see that the Indians are dissatisfied with their mode of governing the country and their ill-treatment, that if their commerce suffers, the British public will no doubt try to find out the cause of this dissatisfaction, and this will probably considerably help the constitutional agitation for the acquisition of political rights. The swadeshi agitation is calculated to promote a sense of patriotism, and persons who exercise self-abnegation for the sake of a principle are sure to prove useful factors of the community and to promote the interests of their country. It is suggested in conclusion that the swadeshi movement will produce harmony and promote union between Hindus and Muhammadans.

ANJAN AKHBAR,
5th September,
1906.

The Brij Mandal club, Muttra, and the swadeshi movement.

42. The Anjan Akhbár (Moradabad), of 5th September, received on 1st October, says that Pandit Din Dayal Sharma delivered lectures on 14th and 16th August last at the instance of the Brij Mandal club, and exhorted the public to boycott foreign sugar, with the result that resolutions were passed by the Vaishya community on the 21st, and by the Khatri community on the 25th of August, forbidding use of foreign sugar on pain of excommunication. The Sanátan Dharm Sabha has supplied sign-boards to such of the confectioners as have given up the use of foreign sugar, and it is to be hoped that foreign sugar will cease very soon to be used in Muttra.

INTIKHAB-I-MEERUT,
September,
1906.

The success of the swadeshi movement.

43. The Intikháb-i-Meerut, for September, received on 1st October, says that the Bengalis are achieving remarkable success in their efforts to promote the swadeshi movement, and illustrates this assertion by referring to the strike of the cartmen at Silchar to carry foreign salt lying at the railway station, and to the resolution of the dhobis to refuse to wash articles of clothing made of foreign piece-goods.

TUHFA I-HIND,
26th September,
1906.

The swadeshi movement and the Muhammadans.

44. The Tuhfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of 26th September, after enumerating the schisms into which the Muhammadans are already split, points out that the swadeshi movement, which a few years back was inaugurated by Babu Raghubir Singh, a vakil of Meerut, and received no support at the time from the Bengalis, is now agitating India, and playing a prominent part in the politics of the day. The editor attributes the strikes and the union meetings to the Bengalis, who by their agitation have succeeded in making Bande matram a by-word all over India. He then points out that the Bengalis, who are naturally deceitful, announced at Manbhoom that Maulvi A. Rasul, and Maulvi Liakat Husain were coming to deliver lectures in support of the swadeshi movement, that the place of these gentlemen was eventually taken by a Muhammadan of no importance or position, who besides eulogizing the movement, endeavoured to find an interpretation in support of the words Bande matram in the Koran, and the Masnawi Maulana Rum. The editor said that the present attitude of the Bengalis is due to their disappointment at the Partition of Bengal, that the Maulvi was actuated by mercenary motives to mislead his Muhammadan brethren, and to espouse the cause of the Bengalis, who are notorious for their selfishness and hatred of the Muhammadans, that the Muhammadans would have been crushed by Government if they had adopted the extremely seditious attitude of the Bengalis, that they are born in the world to be butchered with the blunt knife of oppression, and should prefer to sacrifice themselves for the sake of their sovereign to having their throats cut by their enemies. He points out in conclusion that the attitude of the Bengalis is due mainly to the weakness of Government in accepting the resignations of Lord Curzon and Sir Bampfylde Fuller, and asks if Government will still continue to shower favours on the Hindus in preference to the loyal and faithful Muhammadans. Then follows a poem exhorting the Muhammadans not to place themselves in a false position by supporting the movement, as the lecturers, whether Pandits or Maulvis, are advocating it purely from mercenary motives.

TAFRIH,
28th September,
1906.

The swadeshi movement and agriculture.

45. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 28th September, says that the swadeshi movement has given an impetus to indigenous arts and manufactures, but no means have so far been adopted to improve the agricultural products of India; that it is necessary that Government should render pecuniary assistance to agriculturists, and depute experts to help them with advice and instruction, so as to enable them to supply material of a better quality, which alone can enable weavers to bring into the market the once famous muslin and other commodities for which India was renowned.

The swadeshi movement.

OUDH AKHBAR,
29th September, 1906.

46. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 29th September, contains a short poem exhorting the Indians to take steps to stimulate indigenous arts and industries, and deprecating their extravagant speeches against Government. The writer advises them not to clamour over the Partition of Bengal, and to let their children attend to their studies, instead of having seditious teachings inculcated to them. He deprecates the celebration of the anniversary of Sivaji or the Jubilee of Tilak all over India.

The swadeshi movement.

SANSAR MITRA,
2nd October, 1906.

47. A correspondent in the Sansár Mitra (Allahabad), of 2nd October, says that one Sheo Prasad, a zamindar of Bhairav Garh in Raipur, has offered to give rent free land in his estate to any Hindu company for the cultivation of cotton or other similar commodity for the period of five years with a view to promote the swadeshi movement.

The obstinacy of the Bengalis in connection with the swadeshi movement.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
3rd October, 1906.

48. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, of 3rd October, says that the Golden Bengal has been found to be a concoction, and the coronation of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji has been treated as an innocent religious celebration, yet there is no gainsaying that the agitation in Bengal, the strikes in public and private workshops and manufactories, the boycott of foreign sugar on religious grounds, and of English piece-goods on the ground that the fat of kine and swine is employed in sizing them all tend to cause public disaffection. The Indians as a body, and the Bengalis in particular, must bear in mind that Englishmen have taught them the lesson of freedom, and, that they should rather than create difficulties, do all in their power to facilitate the harmonious working of the machinery of Government. There is no denying the beneficent results that can be expected from the swadeshi movement, but the method adopted for its propagation by Babu Surendra Nath Banerji is calculated to injure the enterprise; and his remarks in a recent speech on the subject, at Serampur, about the drain of Indian money are very misleading. The Indians should exert themselves to combine quality with economy, and then, and then only they will succeed in driving foreign goods from the Indian market, and success in this direction can be achieved only by educating the masses, and inventing and constructing machinery for manufacturing purposes in India.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
23rd September 1906.

The Rafiq Punch (Moradabad), of 23rd September likewise criticises Babu Surendra Nath Banerji's speech at Serampur unfavourably.

Exhibition of Female Art and Manufacture.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
28th September, 1906.

49. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of 28th September, says that an exhibition of Female Arts and Manufactures will be held at Dacca simultaneously with the Muhammadan Educational Conference in December, 1906. Samples of handiwork are invited for the exhibition. The women of other Indian communities likewise are allowed to send specimens of their handiwork if they so desire.

Foreign sugar.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
30th September, 1906.

50. A correspondent in the Nasim-i-Agra, of the 30th September, says that deleterious substances are employed in the refinement of foreign sugar, that its use is not only injurious to health, but is also against the precepts of religion, and that the Indians should refrain from its use in consequence.

The first anniversary of Eastern Bengal and Assam as a separate Province.

OUDH AKHBAR,
29th September, 1906.

51. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 29th September, says that the Muhammadans of Chittagong have resolved to celebrate the first anniversary of Eastern Bengal on the 16th of October next, the date on which it was detached and formed into a separate province. Similar arrangements are under consideration elsewhere, and it is intended to make the day one of great rejoicing and festivity all over the province.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
1st October, 1906.

The attitude of Bengalis towards the new Lieutenant-Governor of Eastern Bengal.

52. The Kanauj Punch (Kanauj), of 1st October, says that the Bengalis were highly gratified at the departure of Sir Bamfylde Fuller, that it is strange that they have not welcomed Mr. Hare, the new Lieutenant-Governor of Eastern Bengal. The editor says that the Bengali leaders have decided not to present any addresses to the new Lieutenant Governor until the Partition of Bengal is set aside.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
3rd October, 1906.

The Golden Bengal.

53. The Nasim-i-Agra, of 3rd October, says that the Statesman has condemned the views of the Englishman regarding the Golden Bengal, which in its opinion were calculated to spread disaffection amongst the people and to alienate the feelings of Government from its subjects. The Pioneer likewise must now feel ashamed of the support it gave the Englishman, and of its extravagant and savage attack on the loyalty of the Indians. The Government, however, is well aware of public feeling towards its benign rule, and cannot be misled by such vagaries, nor can the Bengali leaders, who know how to turn on their enemies the weapons employed to assail them, be affected by such attacks. The editor says that the circular letter, which has been made the subject of so much comment, was nothing more than an advertisement that had been consigned by the police to the waste-paper basket after inquiry.

AGRA AKHBAR,
28th September, 1906.

The Agra Akhbar, of 28th September, points out that the Hindus and their organs are adopting a seditious attitude, it refers to the style and language of the Golden Bengal, and the Muhammadans are exhorted to hold themselves aloof from the Hindus, who look upon them as chandals, and to remain loyal and faithful to Government.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
3rd October, 1906.

The zeal of the Muhammadans of Bengal.

54. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, of 3rd October, while referring to a resolution passed by the Muhammadans of Chittagong to hold an annual celebration in commemoration of the separation of Eastern Bengal, says that not a week passes when the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal do not agitate about one matter or another, ever since Sir Bampfylde Fuller has opened their eyes to their responsibilities towards their community, and exhorts them to remain resolute in opposing the Bengalis with unflinching vigour, as their agitation to have the Partition of Bengal set aside is now being carried on in England itself.

AL AKHLAQ,
August, 1906.

Strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

55. Al Akhláq (Agra), for August, received on 1st October, condemns the strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans, refers to the remarks in the Jásus and the Urdu Akhbár, regarding the existence of such relations, which was made prominent at the time of the celebration of Sivaji and exhorts both Hindus and Muhammadans to set aside racial and religious prejudices and work in harmony for the common good of the country.

SAHIFA,
26th September, 1906.

The Hindus and Muhammadans.

56. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of 26th September, says that the misfortunes of Muhammadans are chiefly due to the fact that they cannot hold themselves aloof from Hindus; that they have regarded trade as a disgraceful calling, and English education as infidelity. The Hindu religion sanctions the practice of lending money on interest and they do not look upon trade as derogatory. They are not only educated, but are also enterprising and go to Japan and European countries to complete technical education, and manage to keep Muhammadans out of Government service. The Muhammadans must understand that their sympathetic loyalty cannot avail Government in any way, and that they cannot gain anything from Government until they have national influence of their own, and must by independent agitation prove that they deserve before they demand. The Hindus are like a creditor who will dun until he gets his dues, while the Muhammadans are like one interceding with the clamouring creditor on behalf of the debtor, and it is therefore that the Hindus are getting what they ask for, while the Muhammadans are neglected.

TAFRIH,
26th September, 1906.

An attempt to promote friendly relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

57. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 28th September, says that a private conference consisting of Hindus and Muhammadans was held at Dacca, with a view to lay aside racial prejudices, and to make common cause in promoting the swadeshi movement, which is calculated to do good to a large section of Muhammadans who live by weaving. A Muhammadan gentleman expressed his dissent from the views and attitude of Nawab Salimulla, and stated that most of the members of the Nawab's family do not share his views. It was resolved that steps should be taken to bring about a reconciliation at an early date, and to counteract mischief makers who are sowing seeds of discord all over India.

JASUS,
28th September, 1906.

Educational qualifications of Muhammadans.

58. The Jásus (Agra), of 28th September, says that the exclusion of Muhammadans from offices is due not to the fact that they lack merit, but to the influence of Hindu clerks and office superintendents who practically monopolize most of the Government offices. The Hindus should give practical proofs of brotherly sympathy with Muhammadans before they boast of it any longer. In conclusion the Muhammadans are urged to agitate and to fight for their rights. It is pointed out that their silence and patience will injure their interests and will not influence Government in their behalf.

ZUL QARNAIN,
28th September, 1906.

Japan and its relations with the Hindus and Muhammadans of India.

59. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of 28th September, while quoting at length the views of a leading French paper on the existing relations between Indians and Japanese, the ever increasing number of Indian students going to complete their education, in Japan, the popularity of Japan, and a dislike for Europeans generally and Englishmen in particular all over India, says that the views can be attributed only to a particular section of the Indian community which favours the swadeshi movement, and agitates over the Partition of Bengal, and are not shared by Muhammadans. The editor, in conclusion, invites the attention of the reading public to the remarks of Saiyid Tufail Ahmad in the Zul Qarnain of 7th August, who has pointed out therein that the needs and surroundings of Muhammadans are different from those of Hindus and they should give preference to Europe and America over Japan for purposes of technical education.

ZUL QARNAIN,
28th September, 1906.

The strained feelings between Europeans and Indians.

60. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of 28th September, refers to the strained relations between Europeans and Indians, and illustrates his views by citing the incident reproduced in Selections No. 38 for 1906, paragraph 57, which gives an account of the rough behaviour at Delhi of a military officer towards Mr. Malabari, while he was travelling by the Punjab Mail a few days ago.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
1st October, 1906.

The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 1st October, reproduces the incident from the Indian Spectator.

INDIAN PUNCH,
2nd October, 1906.

Indians and Europeans.

61. The Indian Punch (Budaun), of 2nd October, deplores the spirit of disunion that pervades India, and thinks that the Indians though charged just the same as Europeans have to submit to inconvenience, and practise self-denial when they come to share rights and privileges with the latter, a fact that is proved uncontrovertibly in the course of journeys by rail or halts in waiting rooms and hotels.

OUDH AKHBAR,
6th October, 1906.

The present relations between Europeans and Indians.

62, A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 6th October, says that there have been a number of incidents of late which go to indicate that there is a tension of feeling between Europeans and Indians. He then refers to certain assaults on Indian ladies, travelling by rail, to the rape of a Madrasi girl by one Mr. Wood at Midnapur, and finally to the unbecoming conduct of the Principal of the Jubbulpur College towards the boarders there, to the intervention of the Professors, and to his subsequent apology.

ZUL QARNAIN,
28th September, 1906.

Separation of executive and judicial functions.

63. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun) of 28th September, fails to see the force and relevancy of the remarks made by the Pioneer regarding the separation of the judicial and executive functions, at an early date as desired by the Secretary of State in his communique to the Viceroy, and hopes that the Secretary of State will fulfil the long-cherished hope of the Indians at an early date.

TAFRIH,
28th September, 1906.

Suggestion for the alteration of certain forms of announcements in the Local Government Gazette.

64. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 28th September, takes objection to the form adopted in the vernacular notifications, announcing leave, transfers, and promotions; and exemplifies it by a quotation—"Mr. C. B. Sinclair Sahib Gonda se Fyzabad ko tabdil kiya gaya." It is suggested that either the word sahib should be omitted, or kiya gaya should be changed into kiye gaye.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
28th September, 1906.

The Grecian system of medicine.

65. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of 28th September, says that the Grecian system of medicine, which is both cheap and adapted to the requirements of Indians is decaying fast for want of State support and public encouragement, and that in case Hindus and Muhammadans do not make common cause in giving it their support, a very useful science which has done immense good to the Indian public, might become extinct. The editor then refers to the Madrasa Tibbiya of Delhi, and suggests that the appeal of Hakim Ajmal Khan should receive every possible support. The two characteristic features of this school are a class for training midwives and the Zenana hospital attached to it. He suggests that the annual conference of physicians should be held in some important town, that an exhibition of medicines should be held simultaneously with the conference, that there should be an Indian pharmacopœia, that a class should be opened for training compounders ; and that branches of the Hindustani and Vaidic Medicines Company, Limited, Delhi, should be opened in other important towns. He points out also the need for a library of works on medicine dealing with the Egyptian and Grecian systems of treatment.

MUFID-I-AM,
24th September 1906.

Grecian system of medicine.

66. The Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of 24th September, supports the views on the subject expressed in the Riaz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 29th September.

AL BASHIR,
2nd October, 1906.

Pandit Jwala Prashad, Collector and Magistrate of Etah.

67. The editor of Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 2nd October, attacks Pandit Jwala Prashad, Collector and Magistrate of Etah, on racial grounds and cites a number of cases to show that he has a predilection for Hindus and a systematic prejudice against Muhammadans in his official dealings. He says that the occasion for the present complaint is the recent scandal about the embezzlement of fees in the Collectorate record room, which again shows that the Magistrate's attitude during the present inquiry had been quite in keeping with his past conduct towards the Hindu and Muhammadan officials, that Hadi Hasan, the Recordkeeper and Rahmat Ullah, who was in charge of the settlement files from which stamps were effaced and affixed to the applications for copies were dismissed, but that Sukhdeo Bihari Lal, the Munsarim in charge of the Copying department, was allowed to work in the office and to bring up his registers after suspension, that Pandit Bishambhar Nath Kak, Deputy Collector who was in charge of the record room, and was chiefly to blame owing to having shut his eyes to the malpractices, was entrusted with the work of estimating the loss occasioned by this embezzlement and allowed to minimize the amount of Government loss to screen himself, and that Pandit Jwala Prashad really feels the force of the arguments advanced against him by the editor is evinced by his silence and failure to institute a complaint of defamation. The latter further suggests that if the Government of Sir James Digges La Touche does not call upon Pandit Jwala Prashad for an explanation, it should at least insist on his instituting criminal proceedings against the editor and exonerating himself in a court of law.

OUDH PUNCH,
4th October, 1906.

Begar in Lucknow Cantonments.

68. The Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of 4th October, says that villagers passing through the Cantonments are forced to cut grass as begaris in spite of their protestations. The editor hopes that the matter will deserve the serious attention of the Cantonment Magistrate, who cannot be expected to have given orders to force wayfarers promiscuously to do menial work.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
28th September, 1906.

The quarantine in Bombay and Kamran.

69. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of 28th September, expresses its gratification at the abolition of the quarantine to which the pilgrims to Hedjaz were subject, and congratulates His Highness Prince Agha Khan and the Bombay Muhammadans on the success that has attended their efforts in this direction.

RAHBAR,
28th September, 1906.

Repression of the Indian Press.

70. The editor of the Rahbar (Moradabad), in its issue of the 28th September, turns the tables on the Pioneer and resents its suggestions about restricting the liberty of the Native Press. He points out that the columns of the Pioneer teem with matter calculated to foment ill-will between Hindus and Muhammadans; and that the tone of the Allahabad daily has gone down considerably ever since the retirement of Mr. Chesney.

71. The editor of the Rahbar (Moradabad), says, in its issue of 28th September, that if regularity in publication is insisted on, a large number of the vernacular papers will cease to exist. The proprietors of a number of these papers have formed themselves into a committee, and after considering a letter from the Postmaster-General to the editor of the Nizám-ul-Mulk to notify the dates on which the paper is to be issued, they have addressed him on the subject, requesting him not to require vernacular papers to name the date of publication, and have made some other suggestions.

Regularity in the issue of vernacular newspapers.

RAHBAR,
28th September, 1906.

72. The editor of the Bhárat Sudasha Pravartak (Farrukhabad), in its issue for August, received on 3rd October, says that the market of false advertisements is brisk, and the Government does not take any steps to check the deceitful practices which are causing much public injury. The editor warns the public.

Deceit by false advertisements.

BHARAT SUDASHA PRAVARTAK,
August, 1906.

73. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of 1st October, says that the residents of Pannigali (Agra), are fully justified in requesting the District Magistrate to remove certain prostitutes in that quarter who are constantly using filthy language to the great annoyance of the residents, and suggests that they should be removed from the locality occupied by family men.

Prostitutes in Pannigali in Agra.

ARYA MITRA,
1st October, 1906.

74. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 6th October, after describing the past glory of India, points out that it is time that Indians should be able to show some inventions like the Europeans and Americans, that they should send out students to Japan and America to learn the process of making camphor and ivory (?), and start the business in India, as it would be calculated to enrich the resources of the country considerably.

Trade in camphor and ivory.

OUDH AKHBAR,
6th October, 1906.

V.—Legislation.

75. The Nasim-i-Agra, of the 30th September, while referring to the rules published recently in certain issues of the Government Gazette for bettering the prospects of employés in District Boards, remarks that the duties of officials employed in Municipal Boards are no less onerous, and invites the attention of His Honour the present Lieutenant-Governor suggesting the amendment of the Municipal Act, and the incorporation of provisions for the amelioration of the lot of these officials, as the last of the many acts calculated to commemorate his beneficent rule in these Provinces.

The employés in Municipal Boards.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
30th September, 1906.

VI.—Railway.

76. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 28th September, says that the question of strikes will come up for consideration at the ensuing meeting of the Railway Board at Simla, and suggests the desirability of overcoming them by redressing the grievances of the employés rather than by having recourse to repressive legislation.

Railway strikes and their prevention.

TAFRIH,
28th September, 1906.

77. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 28th September, while thanking the Railway Board for bestowing their attention on the subject of catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, suggests that contracts should be entered into with local residents on deposit of cash security, making it liable to forfeiture in case of violation of any of the conditions of the contract, and that the business should be divided between two rival competitors at all large stations on the line.

Suggestions for better catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

UNION GAZETTE,
28th September, 1906.

78. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 28th September, feels extremely gratified that the prolonged agitation in the Vernacular Press against the contractors entrusted with catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway has led to the cancellation of the contracts, which will terminate at the end of the year.

Contractors on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

RAHBAR,
28th September, 1906.

RAHBAR,
28th September,
1906.

Disappearance of a native lady and her children while travelling by rail.

79. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 28th September, says, with reference to the painful incident about the disappearance of Dr. Tajuddin's wife and children, while travelling by train, that public feeling has been very much shocked at the repeated dastardly attacks made of late on Indian females, that the present case is unique, owing to the offence having been perpetrated while the lady was travelling with her husband, that the conduct of the station master in not taking down the family when telegraphed to, by the doctor was at least one of culpable negligence. The editor thinks that a great commotion would have been made if this calamity had befallen a European.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
1st October, 1906.

The station master of Seohara.

80. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 1st October, says that Nand Lal, the present station master, who is in bad health, uses intemperate language in his dealings with the public, and deplores the removal of the former station master Tulshi Ram.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
1st October 1906.

Oppression of passengers at the Rampur railway station.

81. A correspondent in the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 1st October, invites attention to conduct of a ticket checker at Rampur railway station who forced him to pay eight annas though the luggage of himself and his wife weighed only twenty-five seers and they were travelling by the intermediate class. He also adds that the matter was referred by him to the station master, but the latter refused to interfere.

VII.—Post Office.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
28th September,
1906.

Complaint against the Postmaster of Moradabad.

82. The Rafiq Punch (Moradabad), of 28th September, says that the public can no longer purchase postal stamps and cards and envelopes from the peons as they could heretofore, and attributes this innovation, which causes inconvenience to the public and loss to Government, to the present Postmaster. The editor concludes with taxing the Naiyar-i-Ázam with doing disservice to the local public by befriending the Postmaster and upholding his cause.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

ANJAN AKHBAR,
5th September,
1906.

The Kayasth Dharmshala at Muttra.

83. The Anjan Akhbár (Moradabad), of 5th September, received on 1st October, says that in a city like Muttra, where each community has a separate dharmshala of its own, and these form the only accommodation for pilgrims, the want of a Kayasth dharmshala is badly felt by Kayasth pilgrims. The editor appeals to the Kayasths and exhorts them to each set apart a day's income for supplying this much felt want.

QULQUL,
24th September,
1906.

Cow-killing at Sabathu.

84. The editor of the Qulqul (Bijnor), says in its issue of 24th September, received on 4th October, that the circumstances attending the cow-killing incident at Sabathu lead to the inevitable conclusion that it was an act of wanton insult to the Hindus, and there seems no reason why the Military authorities there could not sell the cows, in which way they could rid the cantonments of their infections, or why they could not await the receipt of a reply to the telegrams sent by the Hindus to higher authorities.

HINDOSTHAN,
28th September,
1906.

Cow-killing at Sabathu.

85. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of 28th September, says that the wanton butchery of cows at Sabathu by a number of European military men ought not to go unnoticed by the Government of India. Hindu feeling was of course grievously wounded, but apart from that the cruelty was altogether wanton, and unworthy of a civilized and Christian people. The animals were slaughtered not for food, not for the sake of hide or any other commercial purpose, but altogether to gratify a barbarous caprice. Men have been prosecuted for killing a dog of a private owner, and is no notice to be taken of cruelty perpetrated on such a large scale?

SURMA-I-ROZGAR,
1st October, 1906.

Religious difficulties in Cawnpore.

86. A correspondent in the Surma-i-Rozgâr (Agra), of 1st October, writes from Cawnpore that the Sunni Muhammadans stood in the way of repairing Hakim Jafar Mirza's mosque in Patkapur on the ground of its proximity to the Jama Masjid. The Kotwal, the Superintendent of Police and the District Magistrate inspected the locality and the repairs already made in the former mosque, but the Sunnis would not allow them to enter the Jama Masjid. The District authorities after satisfying themselves about the justice of the contention allowed the repairs to be proceeded with.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
7th October, 1906.

French visitors to India.

1. The Nasim-i-Agra, of 7th October, says that an unusually large number of Frenchmen has visited India of late, and it is to be feared, that their visits are not purely pleasure trips, that France is the old enemy of England, and competed with her for the Suzerainty of India for some time, that the relations between France and Russia are undoubtedly much closer than those between France and England, and that the British Government should not repose the confidence it does on French professions of friendship. It is pointed out that the commercial treaty entered into by France clearly indicates that the friendship of France is due to interested motives, and is based on political expediency.

OUDH AKHBAR,
9th October, 1906.

Indian students in Japan.

2. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 9th October, is afraid lest Indian students should settle down in Japan, owing to their predilections in its favour. The tone of certain Japanese papers exhorting Indians to love their country is, he fears, calculated to alienate their feelings from their British rulers. He therefore suggests that Government should start technical schools and colleges all over the country so as to obviate the necessity of Indians going to Japan, and imbibing notions which may in the long run prove detrimental to the wellbeing of the country.

OUDH AKHBAR,
11th October, 1906.

The Sultan of Turkey.

3. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 11th October, says, with reference to the remarks of certain Anglo-Indian papers about the illness of the Sultan, that letters received from two respectable Muhammadan gentlemen, who are travelling through Turkey prove beyond all doubt that the Sultan is enjoying good health. He says that there is a spiritual connection between the Muhammadans and the Sultan of Turkey, which nothing can sever, that this is cemented every year by the annual pilgrimage to the two sacred cities of Arabia, which are under his protection, and that England is well aware of the fact that the connection between the Muhammadans and the Sultan is purely religious, and is in no way founded on disloyal principles.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
4th October, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation to the Viceroy.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 4th October, says that no statesman can afford to be more definite than Lord Minto found it consistent with his office to be, but it may be doubted, whether His Excellency should not have avoided making use of certain expressions which are likely to give an impression that he was indirectly condemning those who have (hitherto) not been bold enough to trade upon their political importance. The editor then says, with reference to the address itself, that the Hindus have a right to look upon it as a political manifesto, wherein the Muhammadans have expressed their determination to have nothing to do in politics with the Hindus, an unsympathetic majority—anxious to have the best things of the world for themselves. He fails to see how they can with full force plead the argument of special protection in their favour, or claim a lion's share in the extended Councils, which Mr. John Morley foreshadowed in his Budget speech, and points out that even if certain sections of the Hindu community be eliminated, and representation be governed on the principle suggested by the Muhammadans, it is obvious that they must be in a minority, and that it is on this account that they ask Government to take into consideration their 'political importance,' the value of the contribution which they make to the defence of the empire, and the position which they occupied in India, a little more than a hundred years ago. The editor confesses his inability to understand the sense and force which the memorialists intended to convey by these expressions. He fails to see how the lion's share can go to the Muhammadans in the representation in the Supreme Council, unless the British Government is determined to invest them, with any peculiar political importance, which it has not done so far ; and entertains strong doubts if any reasonable far-seeing statesman will be prepared to create political castes of the character suggested in the memorial, which is silent as to what the exclusive interests of Muhammadans are, and how they have suffered.

The editor is not prepared to subscribe to any à priori theories regarding the peculiar fitness of Muhammadans for executive appointments, and concludes with reminding them of Sir Alfred Lyall's dictum, in his Asiatic Studies, wherein he has pointed out that " we cannot guarantee to Muhammadans as a right, what would be unfair to other Indian fellow-subjects," and that " we must continue to enlist the best men into our services, whoever they may be."

ADVOCATE,
7th October, 1906.

The Advocate (Lucknow), of 7th October, says that whoever be the first Muhammadan leader who broached the subject to his co-religionists, there is positive proof of the fact that the deputation was the inspiration of some Anglo-Indian of high rank, and that it is calculated to widen the gulf between Hindus and Muhammadans by advocating the formation of the electoral division in municipal elections and nominations to the Councils on the basis of religious faith.

The editor points out that the memorialists ought to have strongly supported not only their claims in the Executive Council, but also the introduction of the Indian element, which introduction is yet doubtful. He is of opinion that appointments should go by merit, and concludes with the remark that Lord Minto's positive statement that the present discontent is due to the craving created by Western education and Western system of government, ought at once to silence the false cry of disaffection and disloyalty raised by the Anglo-Indian Press.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
8th October 1906.

The Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Gorakhpur), of 8th October, regards the memorial presented by the Muhammadans to the Viceroy as the first step in their forward course under the British Government. The editor congratulates the Muhammadans on the loyal and temperate language of the address, and on the careful omission of everything calculated to create racial jealousies and differences, and points out that the policy of equal representation cannot be maintained in a country like Bengal where an attempt is being made to oppress a large community.

ANAND,
9th October, 1906.

The Ánand (Lucknow), of 9th October, says that the Muhammadan deputation, which was made much of by certain Anglo-Indian papers, discloses great want of foresight and mature deliberation, and that some of its proposals, such as the recommendation regarding the election of Muhammadan representatives for Municipal Boards and the Local and Imperial Councils by Muhammadans exclusively, verge on the ridiculous. In conclusion the editor asks if the Anglo-Indian and the Muhammadan Press will persist in their charges against Hindus, in the face of the remarks of the Viceroy, who attributed their agitation to Western education and exonerates them from the charges of sedition and disaffection.

ARYA MITRA,
8th October, 1906.

The Arya Mitra (Agra), of 8th October, says that Muhammadans should eschew flattery, and acquire higher educational qualifications before they aim at higher appointments. The editor points out in another paragraph that a realization of the expectations of Indians from their foreign rulers is impossible, that the Viceroys of India are guided in their words and deeds by the Home Government, and that the graceful reply of Lord Minto to the Muhammadan deputation, though couched in very flattering terms, was nothing beyond an attempt to please the Muhammadans, whose address was no less calculated to win the approbation of His Excellency. The editor says that if flattery could influence Englishmen to interest themselves on behalf of the Indians, the Muhammadans would undoubtedly rise to offices of eminence, and exhorts the Indians therefore to direct their energies only to matters in which they can achieve success by their own exertion.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
8th October, 1906.

The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of 8th October, says that the Viceroy has promised to give their rights to the Muhammadans, and points out that they should refrain from attacks on the Bengali and Hindu agitators after the definite expression of views as to the cause of agitation by His Excellency. The editor advises the Muhammadans to agitate for their rights, and not sit contented, as they have done heretofore.

MUSAFIR-AGRA,
8th October, 1906.

The Musafir-Agra of 8th October says that an open rupture between Hindus and Muhammadans was a foregone conclusion, that the sentiments conveyed in the memorial are calculated to widen the gulf between the two communities, the more so as it purports to be the expression of the feelings of the entire Muhammadan community. Adverting to the memorial itself the editor points out that, arguing on the line adopted by the memorialists, the Muhammadan community would become a negligible minority if the Lal khanis (Sweepers) Rajputs (converts to Islam) Wahabis, and other uncivilized sections of the Muhammadan community are left out of consideration in estimating the total Muhammadan population of India; that the competitive examination is admitted not to suit Muhammadan interests as the bulk of the community consists of uneducated men, that their claims of equality with or rather superiority, to the Hindus are ridiculous, when it is a well-known fact that they are far inferior to the Hindus in education, position, wealth and respectability. He suggests that His Excellency would have acquitted himself better if he had been plain-spoken like the Governor of Madras in his reply to their address on the 13th of October, and had told them to qualify themselves before aspiring to high appointments.

The editor in another paragraph points out that the only way in which the Hindus can win the good-will of Muhammadans is by becoming converts to Islam.

HINDUSTANI,
10th October, 1906.

The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 10th October, is of opinion that certain passages in the address are calculated to widen the gulf between Hindus and Muhammadans. The editor says that he has no objection to Government fixing the proportion of appointments in the services, and of seats in Municipal Boards and in the Councils, if the gulf created between the two communities cannot be bridged otherwise; that the Hindu Judges in the Calcutta High Court and the Punjab Chief Court owe their appointments to their merit; that they as vakils had a large practise and enjoyed the full confidence of their clients. He fails to understand what the Viceroy meant by saying that the Muhammadans of Bengal exercised great self-control, and thinks that the proportion of Muhammadan members in Municipal Boards and Councils cannot be fixed without considering the rights of other minor communities that inhabit India; that such a step will be most impolitic and will create disunion, and prove ruinous to the interests of the country. He asks if Mr. Sharf-ud-din, Nawab Saiyid Muhammad and Nawab Faiyaz Ali Khan, who were elected by a majority of Hindu votes to the Local and Viceregal Councils, can be said to be of the type of Muhammadans referred to in the address, and charged with murdering their conscience merely with a view to please Hindus. In conclusion the editor says that the address is only a clever device to threaten Mr. Morley who however is too old to change his views by such idle threats.

OUDH AKHBAR,
10th October, 1906.

A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 10th October, says that the requests set forth in the memorial are neither new nor improper, that, coming as it did, immediately after the cessation of unpleasant relations between England and Turkey, and a little before the intended visit of the Amir of Kabul, the time selected for its presentation was very opportune, and that there is no reason why rights and privileges enjoyed by the Hindus should not be conferred on the Muhammadans. He points out in conclusion that the views expressed by the London Times in connection with the deputation are erroneous inasmuch as the Congress represents the interests of all communities inhabiting India, and counts Muhammadan leaders like the late Mr. Badr-ud-din Tyabji amongst its members.

AL BASHIR,
9th October, 1906.

Al Bashir (Etawah), of 9th October, says that the reply of the Viceroy has given greater satisfaction than could be anticipated, and that the Muhammadans of India should express their thanks at the kindness shown to the deputation and the sympathy evinced by His Excellency with the interests of Muhammadans. The editor says that he will not in the least be surprised at any quaint interpretations put on the address and the Viceroy's reply, by his brother Hindus, with whom jealousy and a creation of difficulties in the way of Muhammadans are their chief national and political duties.

OUDH AKHBAR,
12th October, 1906.

The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 12th October, points out that the majority of the delegates in the Muhammadan deputation were from the Panjab and Bengal; and that the Muhammadans of Bombay and Madras and the leading Muhammadan members of the Talukdars Association of Oudh did not participate in the movement. The absence of the Nawab of Dacca, owing to an operation performed on his eye, was much to be deplored. The Hon'ble Nawab Saiyid Bahadur, a leading rais of Madras, refused to join the movement, as he could not overcome his belief in the disadvantageousness of the principle of election by racial votes enunciated by the deputation. The original memorial was drafted by Nawab Saiyid Husain of Bilgram, but it had to be altered and recast. The deputation consisted chiefly of Muhammadans of the old school. It was practically unnecessary inasmuch as it desired nothing beyond what has already been asked for by the Congress. The Vazir of Khairpur in Sindh, though present at Simla, did not join the deputation, and the Talukdars of Oudh held themselves aloof from the movement. The only delegate from Bombay is not acknowledged as their representative by the Muhammadan community there. The address does not harmonize with the views of the younger generation of Muhammadans. The principle of western representation has been condemned as Muhammadans are not capable of looking after their rights in case of success, and the system of competitive examinations has been denounced as they find that their community fares badly in them. This view however is not countenanced by young Muhammadans, who look upon such a confession as derogatory. The Muhammadans lease their claims on their proportion to the population of the country, this is only what has been done by the Congress and the Conference for years past. The deputation however asks that Muhammadan representatives should be chosen by Muhammadan electors. This cannot lead to any beneficial results, owing to the limited scope within which a municipal member can exercise his powers, and also it has been looked upon with disfavour by certain leading Muhammadans. As regards the appointment of Muhammadan Judges in the Indian High Courts, the Hindus have with one voice joined the Muhammadans in making the proposal to Government. It is pointed out that the composition of the deputation and the manner in which certain influential bodies have held themselves aloof lead to the conclusion that the deputation cannot be said to represent the interests of the entire Muhammadan community inhabiting India.

AL-AZIZ,
September, 1906.

The Political needs of the Muhammadans.

5. The editor of Al-Aziz in its issue for September deplores the innate passiveness of the Muhammadans, and says that they began with opposing Western education, that, having realized the folly and impropriety of the course they were following, they do not still seem to know whether co-operation with the leaders of the Congress or the organization of a separate political association of their own will help them best to secure their political interests. They regard it as a sin to move Government in their behalf, and quote the late Sir Saiyid Ahmad Khan as their authority for holding themselves aloof from political agitation. The editor points out that times are since quite changed, and their participation in politics is now a necessity, not only with a view to help the authorities in ruling the country on a better system, but also in order to cement the relations between Hindus and Muhammadans. It has to be admitted that the Congress has met with opposition from certain Anglo-Indian officers, who are afraid that a union between the two leading communities of India will weaken British administration; but be the fate of the Congress what it may, it has been proved beyond all doubt that it is not impossible to establish friendly relations between the two communities. In conclusion he points out that only very recently their best friend Sir Bampfylde Fuller has told them in unequivocal language that they should cease to be contented with depending on the favour and justice of Government.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
4th October, 1906.

The London Times and the Muhammadans of India.

6. The Riyáz-ul Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of 4th October, says, with reference to the remarks of the London Times in connection with the Muhammadan deputation to the Viceroy, that the Muhammadans do not look upon the Congress as representing the interests of the several communities inhabiting India, that it is at best a Hindu institution, and there is no reason to apprehend that the Muhammadans will cast in their lot with its promoters, in case Government continues to maintain its present unsympathetic attitude towards their community. The editor also points out that the Muhammadans lack courage and prudence to a degree that renders their organizing an independent association of their own an impossibility; and that they are quite contented with what Government gives them.

TAFRIH,
7th October, 1906.

The Muhammadans and the Government.

7. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 7th October, says, with reference to an article in the London Times expressing its sympathy with the National Muhammadan Deputation, that the Hindus and Muhammadans are both Indians, and any remarks in the Anglo-Indian Press, whether sympathizing with the one community or the other, should be hailed with delight. The editor regrets to find that the Times looks upon the Indian National Congress as seditious, in spite of the fact that the Government of India acknowledges its usefulness.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
8th October, 1906.

The Congress and the Muhammadans.

8. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of 8th October, while referring to the hint thrown out by the London Times about the future attitude of the British Government towards Muhammadans, says that, considering, that Muhammadans are far behind their Hindu brethren, in education, and that their population bears a very small proportion to that of the Hindus, they cannot claim the equal distribution of appointments and of seats, in Municipal Boards and Local and Imperial Councils. They should endeavour to qualify themselves if they think that their interests are suffering; as any dependence on favouritism is inconsistent with wisdom and sound policy. It is vain to characterize the aspirations of the Congress as seditious and extravagant, and the mere connection of Mr. Badruddin Tyabji, who presided at one of its annual sessions, and of a large number of eminent Muhammadans and English leaders, the existence of a Congress committee in the heart of London, and the views expressed by Mr. Morley, are quite enough to set at rest all doubts on this point. The editor points out that the Hindus and Muhammadans must unite and work in harmony as their differences are calculated to increase not only their own difficulties, but also those of Government.

OUDH AKHBAR,
11th October, 1906.

The Muhammadan Association.

9. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 11th October, says that the Muhammadan leaders composing the deputation took the opportunity while at Simla of exchanging their views, and have decided upon organizing a Muhammadan Association for each Province, and also of forming a Central Indian Association which will include delegates from the Provincial Associations. The proceedings of this Association will be quite distinct from those of the Educational Conference at Dacca, and will deal with political matters. Its aim will be to keep the Government informed of the loyal and faithful requirements of the Muhammadans of India, and it will not adopt the attitude of the Congress (in making its demands).

AL BASHIR,
25th September, 1906.

Suggestions for training Indians in the art of war.

10. Al Bashir (Etawah), of 25th September, says, that, now that Government is considering the question of reducing the expenditure incurred on the Army, it will not be out of place to suggest the desirability of training Indians in the art of war; the more so, as the spirit of manliness and heroism is on the wane, and no Power can maintain or fortify its position without keeping such a spirit alive in the hearts of its subjects. There is no reason why the Indians should continue to be looked upon with distrust, owing to the sepoy mutiny, as, while one section was in arms against the Government, Indians all over the country were sheltering Englishmen or helping them to escape at considerable risk to themselves and their families. The editor suggests that certain Colleges, where the influence of European professors is strong, may be selected for military training, and that a beginning may be made with the Muhammadan-Anglo-Oriental College at Aligarh.

TUHFA-I-HIND,
4th October, 1906.

Eurasians.

11. The Tuhfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of 4th October, says, with reference to the remarks of a European condemning Eurasians, in a religious paper published in Calcutta, that being the children of the soil, they should sympathize with, and try to conduce to the well-being of the Indians. Such is not the case however, and it is seen that the weaknesses and shortcomings of both the Indians and the Englishman are ingrained in the Eurasians, that they claim equal rights and privileges with Europeans while they lack their excellent qualifications. The editor concludes with a hope that the Eurasians, who are not merely apathetic to the Indian cause but even are antagonistic to it, may yet adopt a sympathetic attitude.

OUDH AKHBAR,
8th October, 1906.

The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 8th October, says, with reference to the strictures of a European on the Eurasian community, that Englishmen have every reason to blame Eurasians as they are the children of the soil, and feel a love for their mother country. Their educational qualifications have placed them on the same footing with Englishmen, and being born in India they are the medium of spreading European culture amongst other Indian communities, who should treat them as brothers, and try to forget and forgive little differences which arise occasionally, as they do within their family circles.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th October, 1906.

The Anglo-Indian Press and the Indians.

12. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 5th October, exhorts the Indians to discountenance such of the Anglo-Indian papers as are systematically striking at the very root of Indian advancement, and hopes thereby to lead them to a right appreciation of the disapproval of their subscribers.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
7th October, 1906.

Mr. Stead's suggestion to the Native Press regarding an invitation to certain editors of the English Press.

13 The Indian People (Allahabad), of 7th October, says that Mr. Stead's sugguestion to the Native Press of India, to invite next December, the editors of some of the leading English papers has so far commended itself to the press in Bengal, that a committee has been formed to carry it out. The editor says that at a very modest computation the visit of six gentlemen from England will cost fifteen thousand rupees; and considering the poverty of the press in India, doubts if two thousand rupees could be raised without donations from the outside public. He thinks that there is no likelihood of Mr. Stead's suggestion being carried out this year, even with the utmost expedition, that may be displayed by the committee formed in Bengal, suggests that leading representatives of the Liberal and the Tory Press should be invited when the scheme becomes feasible, and that an attempt should be made to give effect to Mr. Stead's valuable suggestion.

TAFRIH,
7th October, 1906.

The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 7th October, says that the scheme can be rendered practicable by the co-operation of the well-to-do Indian public, and is calculated to lead to great political results.

HINDUSTANI,
10th October, 1906.

The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 10th October, dissents from Mr. Stead's views and suggests that the sum of one thousand pounds, which will hardly suffice to defray the expenses of the six editors if invited, might with more advantage be spent in sending three speakers to England with a view to agitate there and secure interest in Parliament. The editor thinks besides that it is possible despite the wishes of their hosts that some of the guests may not feel inclined to support their cause eventually.

MUFID-I-AM,
8th October, 1906.

The Vernacular Press on the relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

14. A correspondent in the Mufíd-i-Ám (Agra), of 8th October, while referring to an error in the Oudh Akhbár in remarking that the strained feelings between the butchers and the Muhammadans of Delhi are at an end, points out that the error was the result of wilful misrepresentation, invokes the Muhammadans to cast aside their simplicity and credulity, to live up to the standard laid down by the Vakil, the Watan, the Paisa the Mufíd-i-Ám and Al Bashir in their dealings with Hindus, and to take steps to guard themselves against the wiles of their brethren. The editor endorses the views expressed by the correspondent, and wishes him every success in moving the Muhammadans to act up to his precepts.

HINDOSTHAN,
8th October, 1906.

English philanthropists and the opium-eating Chinese.

15. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of 8th October, says that a very serious question has been raised in the columns of the Bengalee, in connection with the opium-eating habit of the Chinese which causes intolerable shame and sorrow to English philanthropists. The editor has no hesitation in endorsing the views of the Bengalee that the nation that found the Indians sober and made them drunk, is scarcely a fit instrument in the hands of Providence to reclaim the Chinese from the bondage of poppy and Mandragoora (drunkenness), and says that the words are as true as they are cutting. It has ever been a wonder to us that kind-hearted English gentlemen, bishops, rectors, lay reformers and others could sit "over the walnuts and port wine," and deplore the opium habit of the Chinese, while busily circulating the decanter amongst themselves. It is impossible to draw a true comparison between the effects of opium and those of alcohol, but a very great number of people fairly well acquainted with both would, if the choice were thrust upon them, choose opium as being the less evil of the two. Both when used to excess have terrible consequences for the victim, but alcohol is a demon which is not satisfied with the destruction of the sinner who imbibes it, but must stimulate him to the commission of all kinds of crime, even of murder, in which the innocent suffer more than the guilty. The evil effects of opium, as a rule, are passive rather than active, and to that extent, at any rate, the harm done in opium-smoking countries is less than that done in such as are cursed by alcohol.

The Faoji Amin on the relation between India and Japan.

ANAND,
9th October, 1906.

16. The Ánand (Lucknow), of 9th October, expresses its high appreciation of the views of the Pioneer in refuting the views of the Faoji Amin regarding the strained relations between the British Government and its Indian subjects, who it is alleged wish to regain their independence, and are only biding their time until some Asiatic Power comes forward to espouse their cause; and suggests that it will be a really good thing if the Pioneer adheres to such views when Indian interests are under discussion.

ARYA MITRA,
8th October, 1906.

The Arya Mitra (Agra), of 8th October, indulges in sarcasm over the assertion of the Pioneer that Englishmen have come to India merely with a view to confer freedom and civilization on the Indians, and points out that English civilization to begin with manifested itself in the enactment of measures restricting the use of arms, and thereby rendered them quite unfit for manly pursuits; it then taught them contentment, so that they cannot now aspire to any thing higher than a Deputy Collectorship; and as regards their conferring freedom on the Indians it is hardly necessary to do anything beyond referring to the repeated interference with Bengali religious processions while passing through the streets.

HINDUSTANI,
10th October, 1906.

The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 10th October, expresses its approbation of the views expressed by the Pioneer, and says that, should the Allahabad daily say hereafter that India was won by the sword, it should be reminded of the view expressed in discussing Faoji Amin's letter.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

The visit of the Amir of Kabul to India.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
4th October, 1906.

17. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of 4th October, says that the decision of the Amir to visit the Aligarh College, and the Himayati Islam at Lahore, is very gratifying to Muhammadans, and that the two institutious have now the opportunity of realizing their cherished hopes from their Royal visitor. The editor suggests that in case the information about the visit of His Majesty to Lucknow be true, the Nadwat-ul-ulama should arrange for the Shah of Kabul to visit the school, to enable him to see what services this institution is rendering to the Muhammadan community.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th October, 1906.

The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 5th October, expresses its disapprobation of the views of the London Times and its depreciation of the present political importance of the Amir of Kabul in his relations with India.

OUDH AKHBAR,
10th October, 1906.

The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 10th October, says that Afghanistan was held by a succession of Moghul Emperors as a Province, that its extent is less than that of a number of Feudatory States of India, and that a number of Indian Chiefs by far outshine the Amir in pomp and magnificence, and would take precedence over him, were it not that the British Government regards Afghanistan as the bulwark of the British Empire in India. Nothing has been said so far about an invitation to the ensuing Darbar of any of the Chiefs of India. Such a course, however, will be desirable with a view to impress the Amir with the pomp and grandeur of the British Empire. The Maharana of Udaipur, and the Maharajas of Jaipur and Jodhpur have, from time immemorial, enjoyed the greatest distinction ever accorded to the ruler of an Indian Province, nor can it be alleged that the prestige of the Maharaja Scindia, the Maharaja of Cashmere and of certain other Chiefs is in any way inferior to that of the Barakzai clan under the Durrani rulers.

History proves it to be greater. It is therefore highly desirable that due regard be paid to the dignity and importance of the Indian Princes and Chiefs at the forthcoming Darbar, so as to avoid every possibility of offence or slight however unintentional. It is suggested also that the independent Chiefs of India should follow the example set by the Suzerain Power in receiving and entertaining the Amir.

OUDH AKHBAR,
11th October, 1906.

The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 11th October, says that the attitude of the Amir has endeared him to his subjects, who respect him not only as a political leader, but also as their religious guide, for which he is pre-eminently qualified by his bearing and wisdom. The pomp and magnificence of the Darbars held to celebrate his accession as Amir, and his subsequent assumption of the title of Shah, leave no room to doubt that a new Muhammadan power has come into existence in Asia, which can by no means be regarded as in any way inferior to Turkey.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
11th October, 1906.

The Nasim-i-Agra, of 11th October, remarks that the late Ghulam Haidar Khan, the Amir's General, when asked by Lord Kitchener what he thought of the manœuvres he had witnessed one day, characterized them as a tamasha (spectacle), and, when further questioned as to what he meant by the expression, pointed out that looking at the way in which the soldiers were supplied with refreshments he could not regard them otherwise. The editor says that, if similar manœuvres are to be performed in the presence of the Amir during his ensuing visit, our military officers will do well to refrain from supplying the soldiers with refreshments so that the Amir may not have the opportunity of seeing that the ease-loving British soldiers are pampered and afford a marked contrast to the Afghan who will fight the enemy with one chapati to sustain him during the day.

ZIYA-UL-ISLAM,
for October, 1906.

The Ziya-ul-Islam (Moradabad), for October, says that the visit will be conducive of good results to India and Kabul.

OUDH AKHBAR
12th October, 1906.

The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 12th October, has reproduced a letter from an Afghan to his countrymen, in connection with the Amir's visit to India, wherein he points out the advantages of education, and exhorts such of them as accompany the Amir to have their eyes open and to collect information which may be turned to good account on their return to Kabul. He points to the greatness of European countries and Japan, and attributes it chiefly to education. He advocates technical education, and considers railways and ships to be the outcome of mental culture; and points out the usefulness of translations of works on arts and sciences into the language of the country. He exhorts the Afghans to look upon the education of their children as their first duty.

III.—Native States.

SAHIFA,
5th October, 1906.

The Muhammadan National Bank in Tonk.

18. The editor of the Sahifa (Bijnor), of 5th October, announces the formation of a Muhammadan National Bank, at Tonk, which will advance money without interest, in case of necessity, to the Muhammadans of the State, and suggests the desirability of such banks being established for the good of the Muhammadan community all over India. The bank invites donations to add to its funds.

JASUS,
7th October, 1906.

Jaipur.

19. The Jásus (Agra), of 7th October, condemns the promiscuous appointment of incompetent officials to onerous posts in Jaipur, and notices in particular the inefficiency of the Commander-in-Chief. The editor has also occasion to complain of the way in which officials are on the look out for his correspondents in the State.

TUHFA-I-HIND,
4th October, 1906.

Muhammadan Judges in Indian High Courts.

20. The editor of the Tuhfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), says, in its issue of 4th October, that the newspaper world is at present discussing the question of the appointment of Muhammadan Judges in the Indian High Courts, and hopes that, since capable Muhammadans are forthcoming in every Province, Government will take early steps in that direction independently of any agitation on the part of Muhammadans.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
8th October 1906.

The Kanauj Punch, of 8th October, invites the attention of Government to the suggestions of Parsi and Bengali newspapers about the desirability of appointing one or more Muhammadan Judges in the Indian High Courts, as the death of Mr. Badruddin Tyabji has removed the last member of that community who enjoyed that distinction.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th October, 1906.

Conviction of a European soldier for insubordination.

21. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 5th October, asks, with reference to the opinion of a General Officer as to the inadequacy of a sentence of fifty-six days' imprisonment passed on a soldier for assaulting his superior officer, if such a view cannot be taken of sentences passed on European soldiers for offences against Natives, and points out that unless this is done, Government cannot claim to practice equal justice to the rulers and the ruled.

ADVOCATE,
7th October, 1906.

An Indian shot at by a British soldier.

22. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 7th October, says that one more Indian, " a black nigger," escaped by a hair's breadth from dying from a bullet, that is said to have been put into him by an intoxicated British soldier in the Lucknow Cantonment, in the third week of September. The son of Mars ran away in a hired carriage after inflicting the injury. A police enquiry followed and the soldier was brought before the Cantonment Magistrate who sentenced him to some days' simple imprisonment.

JASUS,
7th October, 1906.

Mahants of the Gaddi of Salempur Garhi in the Moradabad District.

23. The Jásus (Agra), of 7th October, invites the attention of Government to the bequest of the late Mahant Parbhuban of Salempur Garhi, who has left his estate to his widow in contravention of the immemorial custom of succession by disciples. The Mahants are enjoined to live a life of celibacy, but the late Mahant outraged public feeling by living as a married man. The editor suggests that the estate should be placed under the Court of Wards pending the decision of a litigation between the widow and his disciples.

25. The Ziya-ul-Islam, (Moradabad), for October views with approval the policy of non-interference adopted by the Magistrate in connection with a motion to remove meat shops from certain quarters in Moradabad.

AGRA AKHBAR,
7th October 1906.

Import duty in Agra.

26. The Agra Akhbar, of 7th October, objects to the departure from the old practice in the levy of import duties, and points out that it is calculated to injure trade. The early attention of the Chairman of the Municipal Board is invited to the matter so as to enable him to check further mischief in this direction.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
7th October, 1906.

Municipal arrangements in Agra.

27. The Nasim-i-Agra, of 7th October, says that the stinking water of cisterns and cesspools still continues to be thrown into the drains, and is a source of great public annoyance, that the fountain and its pedestal are again in an unsatisfactory condition, and that ekkas are still allowed to ply up and down the roads, in search of fares, and are apt to injure foot passengers in the thronged streets.

(e).—Education.

AL BASHIR,
25th September 1906.

University Results.

28. Al Bashir (Etawah), of 25th September, says that the practice of announcing the results of the B. A. Examination in order of merit having been discontinued, people in certain quarters are beginning to think that this will later on lead to malpractices. The editor however thinks that there is no ground for such suspicion, as the Registrar of the University is invariably a thoroughly reliable officer.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
1st October, 1906.

The appointment of the Directors of Public Instruction.

29. The Cawnpore Gazette, of 1st October, expresses its satisfaction at the orders issued by Mr. Morley regarding the selection of officers belonging to the Education Department for the office of Director of Public Instruction, to the exclusion of civilians, and says that this is just what the public expected from him.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
4th October, 1906.

Urdu versus Hindi.

30. The Riyaz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of 4th October, says that the Urdu language has been formed in centuries, and cannot be supplanted by Nagri so long as the several communities that have contributed to its formation continue to remain welded together to form one nation. The editor appeals to the conscience of the reading public to acknowledge that while reading Nagri publications, they very often feel the necessity of a Urdu equivalent for certain unintelligible words and phrases. He points out that even at the present day, Urdu is the vehicle of thought throughout India, as is evident from the publication of Urdu newspapers in every part of the country. In conclusion, he suggests that the works on arts and sciences in the Urdu language should be brought to perfection by further publications.

TUHFA-I-HIND,
4th October, 1906.

Common schools for the education of boys and girls.

31. The Tuhfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of 4th October, says that the Sultan has started a school at Constantinople in commemoration of his birthday where boys and girls are to be educated together, and the institution has been received with great public satisfaction, that such institutions are in existence in European countries and in Japan, and that certain leaders of public opinion in India advocate them on grounds of utility. The editor thinks that the scheme will cease to be looked upon with disfavour with the progress of free education in India.

SANSAR MITRA,

32. The Sansar Mitra (Allahabad), of the 9th October, points out the iniquity of conferring the State scholarship during the current year on a Muhammadan student (who is only a Bachelor of Arts) in supersession of the preferential claims of Pandit Tika Ram, who stood first at the M. A. Examination of the Allahabad University. The editor invites the Local Government to reconsider its decision in the matter.

ALMORA AKHBAR,
30th September, 1906.

Babu Surendro Nath's effigy and his Coronation.

33. The Almora-Akhbar, of 30th September, while deploring the conduct of European and Eurasian employés concerned in burning Babu Surendra Nath's effigy, says that there is nothing to restrain them even if they extend their violence to the person of Babu Surendra Nath, but they must bear in mind that nothing can burn his immortal reputation.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
1st October, 1906.

The Cawnpore Gazette, of 1st October, says that the European and Eurasian employés of the East Indian Railway, who became demented since the recent strike on the line, burnt the effigy of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji after conveying it through the streets of Asansol. The procession consisted only of a band playing in front of the cart carrying the effigy and of a few chaprasis in its rear. The editor says that the educated Muhammadans of Asansol felt disgusted with the conduct of the Eurasians.

MUFID-I-AM,
8th October, 1906.

The Mufid-i-Ám (Agra), of 8th October, discussing in a sarcastic vein the alleged coronation of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji, points out that the King-Emperor need no longer worry himself about the Government of India, and may safely leave the Secretary of State and Babu Surendra Nath Banerji to manage the country between them, and, since a crowned king is already in India, the Viceroy may be removed as a superfluity. The editor points out that the Muhammadans are not yet prepared for divided rule and may be allowed to remain under the King-Emperor.

34. The editor of the Kanauj Punch of 8th October, says that Babu Surendra Nath's reference in his speech to the use of the fat of kine and swine in sizing Manchester piece-goods reminds one of the greased cartridges which led to the mutiny in 1857, and expresses a hope that he will refrain from using language which may be calculated to create disaffection.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
8th October, 1906.

35. The Anand (Lucknow), of 2nd October, received on 8th October, says that Babu Surendra Nath Banerji has recently exhorted the student community to inculcate the advantages of the swadeshi movement to villagers as they go home during the Durga Puja holidays. He expatiated on the afflicted condition of India, and enjoined them to observe the 16th October with all the solemnity it demands owing to the partition of Bengal, and to remain firm to the resolve they have taken to give every support to the swadeshi movement.

The swadeshi movement.

ANAND,
2nd October, 1906.

The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of 8th October, notices with great satisfaction the progress that the swadeshi movement, technical education, and indigenous arts and manufactures are making in Benares. The swadeshi shops are on the increase and the business transacted is encouraging.

BHARAT JIWAN,
8th October, 1906.

The Arya Darpan (Shahjahanpur), for September, says that the swadeshi movement has fermented public feeling in India, that the Bengalis have shown unflinching zeal and earnestness in promoting the interests of their country, and that their noble example should be imitated by the followers of the Sanatan Dharma and the Mahamandal in these Provinces. The editor exhorts them to merge all religious differences, and to make common cause in aiding the swadeshi movement which is purely a social enterprise.

ARYA DARPAN,
for September, 1906

The Arya Mitra (Agra), of 8th October, exhorts the Agra public to stimulate their flagging zeal in the cause of the swadeshi movement, and congratulates the Bengalis on their sustained zeal and perseverance in its cause.

ARYA MITRA,
8th October, 1906

The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of 8th October, says that Babu Surendra Nath Banerji while lecturing at Serampore on the annual loss to India of a sum of fifty crores of rupees which is constantly passing into the hands of foreign tradesmen, pointed out that the plunder of Nadir Shah involved a loss of twenty-two crores only, that such a reference to Nadir Shah was quite unnecessary and was calculated to wound Muhammadan feelings, and the lecturer should have confined his discourse to the advantages resulting from the swadeshi movement.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
8th October, 1906.

The Rafiq Punch (Moradabad), of 7th October, feels highly gratified at learning that large quantities of Manchester piece-goods have not been ordered by Indian tradesmen on the Lucky Day, and points out that this has been a source of great disappointment to the firms in Manchester.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
7th October, 1906.

36. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 7th October, says that the Bengali ladies of Calcutta have given strong proofs of their patriotism and magnanimity by opening a market, to be called the swadeshi mela, for the exclusive sale of indigenous products, one-half of the profits will go to the Indian Famine Fund, and the other half will be contributed towards the help of widows and orphans. The editor views this spirit of self-abnegation with great approbation.

Opening of a swadeshi mela in Calcutta.

UNION GAZETTE,
7th October, 1906.

37. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 9th October, says that swadeshism has its hold even on the menial classes in Bengal, and is evinced by their refusal to serve those who use foreign articles. They are extolled for their sense of patriotism; and the self-control they exercised on a recent occasion when the police stopped their procession with a view to goad them to a riot, is looked upon as highly commendable. The editor considers the conduct of the police as uncalled for, and suggests that if there was any anticipation of a breach of the peace those responsible for it should be dealt with according to law.

Swadeshism in Bengal.

OUDH AKHBAR,
9th October, 1906.

OUDH AKHBAR,
10th October 1096.

The Swadeshi movement.

38. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 10th October, says that the efforts of the promoters of the swadeshi movement have been attended with remarkable success as is evident from the fact that the income of the largest European firm on 24th September last, which was observed as a close holiday by others was only ninety thousand rupees, a sum which compares very unfavourably with that earned in previous years when it came up to something between eight and ten lakhs. Again, the business transacted by the Márwáris with Manchester firms was considerably less than in previous years. This was due in the first place to the inability of the Márwáris to dispose of the piece-goods already in stock, and secondly to the fact that the Manchester mill-owners could not accept the terms offered by the Márwáris, which goes to show that Manchester goods cannot compete with indigenous products in cheapness. It is suggested in conclusion that immediate steps should be taken to meet the demand for thread for which India has yet to depend entirely on Manchester.

ANAND,
9th October 1906.

Bande-Matram.

39. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 9th October, while referring to the institution of cross-suits by the police and certain residents of Nasik who were arrested for singing the Bande-Matram, says that there seems to be no dearth of officers of the Fuller type, and suggests that Indians should be careful not to give provocation to European officers where it can be avoided.

HINDUSTANI,
10th October, 1906.

The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 10th October says that the views expressed by the Pioneer and the Englishman on the subject are calculated to widen the gulf between Hindus and Muhammadans.

ANAND,
2nd October 1906.

Swadeshi sugar.

40. The Anand (Lucknow), of 2nd October, says that certain confectioners in Lucknow have resolved to restrict themselves to the exclusive use of country sugar, and have gone so far as to dispose of jams and other articles containing an admixture of foreign sugar by auction sale.

The editor adds in its issue of 9th October that eighteen confectioners at Lucknow have undertaken to use purely swadeshi sugar, and have bound themselves to pay a penalty of one hundred rupees for any breach of the undertaking.

MOHINI,
9th October, 1906.

The Mohini (Kanauj) of 9th October, reports similar success under the auspices of the Kanya kubja sabha at Kanauj. The editor exhorts the Indians to remain steadfast in the cause of the swadeshi movement, and in boycotting foreign sugar.

JASUS,
7th October, 1906.

Foreign sugar.

41. The editor of the Jásus (Agra), of 7th October, recommends the public to read the pamphlets compiled and published by Babu Hira Lal Gupta of Rurki, wherein he points out the deleterious effects of foreign sugar, which is said to be refined by means of blood and urine. The assertion is supported by quotations from eminent doctors and physicians and the public are exhorted to boycott foreign sugar, on religious and sanitary grounds.

BHARAT JIWAN,
8th October, 1906.

The editor of the Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of 8th October, reproduces a letter from a correspondent about the wholesale boycott of foreign sugar in Shibpur, and exhorts the Benares public to adopt similar measures in the city.

MUFID-I-AM,
8th October, 1906.

The Mufid-i-Ám (Agra), of 8th October, while referring to a Hindi pamphlet pointing out that the process of refining sugar involves the use of bovine blood, urine and bone ash, says that it is the imperative duty of religious leaders of Islam to make a careful examination of the matter and to pronounce their verdict about the use of foreign sugar, independently of the utility of its boycott from a swadeshi standpoint.

BHARAT JIWAN,
8th October, 1906.

Sago.

42. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of 8th October, condemns the use of sago which it says on the authority of the Encyclopædia Britannica is an impure substance akin in taste and preparation to foreign sugar.

AL BASHIR,
25th September, 1906.

Proposed exhibition of female handiwork at Dacca.

43. A correspondent in Al Bashir of the 25th September, says with reference to the ensuing exhibition of female handiwork at Dacca, that the exhibition by itself cannot lead to beneficial results, that every effort should be made to impart female education and an attempt should be made to train female teachers at the Aligarh College, who can be sent out to impart education in respectable Muhammadan families all over the country.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
8th October, 1906.

Exhibition of handi-work of Muhammadan ladies.

44. A correspondent in the Riyaz-ul-Akhbar, of 8th October, says that a number of articles sent to the last exhibition of female handi-work, had been prepared by men and were not the genuine handi-work of Muhammadan ladies; a point on which he took particular care to satisfy himself on being led to doubt the bonâ fide genuineness of the exhibits. As regards the observance of the purdah system, he points out that those who attended the Aligarh Conference are well aware of the fact that the Secretary and his youthful students who played tunes of love to excite the hearts of the lady visitors had every access to them, though the outside world was led to believe that this was not so.

AL-AZIZ,
for September, 1906.

Requisites for Union.

45. A correspondent in Al-Aziz (Agra), for September says that a common language and a national dress are essential to unite the different communities inhabiting India, into one nation, and points out that Urdu, which consists of words taken from the various dialects spoken in India, and is understood all over the country, should be regarded as the language of the nation.

HINDOSTHAN,
10th October,
1906.

A united India.

46. A correspondent in the English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of 5th October, says that the policy of those who administer what is called British justice, is to divide and rule, and that it has shown itself very palpably of late in Eastern Bengal and Assam, that there was no agitation on the part of Muhammadans for partition, before it became an accomplished fact, that the fuss which has been made by them and has culminated into the deputation to the Viceroy was the outcome of the hints thrown out by certain interested wire-pullers in the Civil Service of India; and that any one acquainted with the late Lieutenant-Governor of Eastern Bengal can easily understand the trouble he raised about himself by his repressive measures, verbosity and self-advertisement. He points out that the social and religious agitation that is at present going on in various sects, communities and associations in India is a sure indication of a universal desire to unite India for the good of India; and that education, toleration, and the active introduction and support of all industries so as to make India self-supporting are essential to the achievement of this result. In conclusion, he exhorts Indians of every denomination (official Anglo-Indians excepted) to sink their differences, and to promote a better understanding of one another, so as to raise India to a self-governing colony; and suggests that leaders from every section of the people should come forward, and form an all-India Society with branches in each Province, and sub-branches to propagate union and the tenets of the parent society in every city and village of India.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
8th October 1906.

The morals of the Bengalis.

47. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 8th October, says that the moral turpitude of the Bengalis, varies in direct proportion with their intellectual culture, that though the most educated community in India, History proves them to be mean, ignoble, ungrateful, perfidious, impudent, bigoted and seditious. They looked upon the death of Lady Curzon as Divine visitation, and while referring to an earthquake in South America, one of their organs (the Hindu Patriot) expressed a wish that Dacca should become convulsed with a similar calamity. The remark was replied to by the Observer, a Muhammadan paper of the Punjab, which expressed a desire that Bengal should become effaced from the earth. The editor however is actuated by sympathy inculcated by Islam and prays God to open the eyes of Bengal.

DABDABA-I-SIKANDARI,
8th October, 1906.

The first anniversary of the Partition of Bengal.

48. The Dabdaba-i-Sikandari (Rampur), of 8th October, says that it has been resolved at a meeting held in Chittagong to celebrate the first anniversary of the Partition of Bengal on 16th October next, with great eclat and rejoicing. Similar meetings are being organized elsewhere to treat the day as one of festivity all over the New Province.

HINDUSTANI,
10th October 1906.

A change of capital in Eastern Bengal.

49. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 10th October, says that there is a strong likelihood of Chittagong being the future capital of Bengal, as the present Lieutenant-Governor has expressed himself positively on the desirability of such a change. The editor suggests that it is quite possible that Chittagong and Assam alone may go to form the new Province and the rest of the area be reunited with the old Province.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th October, 1906.

The scope of the Native Press.

50. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 5th October, expresses its approbation of the step taken by His Highness the Nawab of Rampur in submitting to Government the letter which had been sent to him by the editor of one of the vernacular papers threatening to expose him unless he mended his ways, and suggests that Government should take serious notice of such conduct on the part of editors.

JASUS,
7th October, 1906.

The suggestions made by the Native Press to Government.

51. The Jásus (Agra), of 7th October, suggests the desirability of Government adopting measures to keep the Press informed of its views regarding the suggestions made by it and invokes the support of its contemporaries in the matter.

UNION GAZETTE,
7th October, 1906.

The attitude of Government towards English and Indian newspapers.

52. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 7th October, says that English and Anglo-Indian journals and newspapers have a much wider latitude and enjoy far more privileges than their Native contemporaries, and things that would be branded as seditious in a Native are looked upon as bearing the stamp of good faith if emanating from an Englishman. The editor illustrates this allegation by reference to a cartoon in a recent issue of the John Bull caricaturing British tyranny in Tanta and Natal, and reminds the public of the prosecution of the editor of the Bhala for a much less serious offence than that of the English Journal. He concludes with the remark that diversity of policy in dealings with English and Native proprietors and editors is calculated to wound the feelings of natives and to lower Government in their estimation.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
1st October, 1906.

Arts and industries in Indian jails.

53. The Cawnpore Gazette, of 1st October says, with reference to the correspondence passing between the Government of India and the Local Government regarding arts and industries in jails, that any attempt to widen their scope will tend to injure private enterprise in this direction which is extremely undesirable; and expresses a hope in conclusion that the result will in no way lead to dissatisfaction.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
7th October, 1906.

Official interference with religious festivals.

54. The Nasim-i-Agra, of 7th October, says that Government officers, especially Europeans, do not respect the religious feelings of Indians, and illustrates his assertion by pointing out that the Judge of Agra held his court on the Dasehra festival day to the great annoyance and inconvenience of Hindu subordinates. The editor invites the attention of the High Court to the matter.

ZUL QARNAIN,
7th October, 1906.

Pandit Jwala Prasad, Collector and Magistrate of Etah.

55. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of 7th October, referring to certain charges brought against Pandit Jwala Prasad, Collector of Etah (and reproduced in Selections No. 40 for the week ending the 6th October 1906) suggests the desirability of Government calling upon him to exonerate himself in a court of law or in some other manner. The editor is quite at one with the views expressed by the editor of Al Bashir, and points out that he is a supporter of the Congress, and is actuated by racial predilections and animosities, which hamper the just administration of the district under his control.

HINDUSTANI,
10th October,
1906.

Deaths caused by wild beasts.

56. The editor of the Hindustani (Lucknow), of 10th October, quotes facts and figures to show that there is an increase in the number of deaths caused by wild beasts and regrets that Government does not feel inclined to relax the provisions of the Arms Act, which alone can save the unprotected people from such dangers.

V.—LEGISLATION.

ARYA DARPAN,
for September, 1906.

Sale of liquor.

57. The Arya Darpan (Shahjahanpur), for September says that the resolution of the Madras Government forbidding the sale of liquor to boys under the age of fourteen years, should be extended to other intoxicating drugs, to cigars, cigarettes, and the like, and should be adopted in every province.

The use of cocaine.

TUHFA-I-HIND,
4th October, 1906.

58. The Tuhfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of 4th October, deplores the ever increasing use of cocaine in the United Provinces, and points out that legislation alone can repress it successfully. The editor suggests that its sale should be restricted to respectable medical practitioners, as license-holders are sure to make a wrong use of the privilege.

VI.—RAILWAY.

Corruption in the railway.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
1st October, 1906.

59. The Cawnpore Gazette, of 1st October, says that not only contracts and appointments cannot be secured without the payment of a bribe, but the delivery of goods and luggage likewise entails gratuitous payments, and that the Railway department is corrupt from top to bottom, and reform is highly desirable.

Outrages on Indian women on Indian Railways.

ADVOCATE,
7th October, 1906.

60. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 7th October, after remarking on the inadequacy of sentences inflicted on two Eurasian engine-drivers at Budaun in a case of female outrage, gives the following account of a similar case, which has just happened in Behar on the East Indian Railway :—The complainant, a girl of fifteen, was booked with her mother from Benares for Howrah on 6th September. They changed at Moghal Sarai into 12-Down Howrah train and got into a male compartment in which there were two or three males. Mr. W. E. Alexander was the guard of the train, and at Buxar took out the two women, and put them into a female compartment in which there was no other passenger, on the pretext that they were travelling in a wrong compartment. At a subsequent station the accused got into this compartment, sat by the side of the young girl and seized her hand and endeavoured to induce her to go with him to his compartment. The women remonstrated. A passenger, whom the women called khalasi, saw the guard molesting the girl. He informed the Station-master at Twiniganj, who came to the platform to see what the matter was, but the train was out of his jurisdiction. He wired to the Raghunathpur Station-master, who did not find the guard in the brake-van, but saw him coming from the direction of the women's carriage. He informed him of the complaint against him, but the guard started the train without listening to him. The Station-master, redirected the wire to Bihia. On arrival of the train, there was great clamour among the passengers. The Station-master taxed the guard with the complaint against him and the latter, it was alleged, requested him to hush up the matter by payment of some money to the girl. This he refused and sent the girl in charge of a passenger, who offered his services, to Arrah, where the women were taken out and their statements recorded by the police.

The accused was tried under section 354, Indian Penal Code, with the help of a jury and sentenced by the District Magistrate to one month's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of one hundred rupees, half of which is to go to the girl to whom insult was offered. We characterise this punishment as much inadequate, and think that Government should apply for its enhancement. Cases of outrages on Indian women on railways, at the hands of European and Eurasian employés are becoming numerous, and nothing but exemplary punishment can prevent their recurrence. What guarantee there is that the convicted man will not be again employed either on the East Indian Railway or some other railway.

ANAND,
9th October 1906.

The Anand (Lucknow), of 9th October, views with horror the conduct of one Alexander, a railway guard, who attempted to outrage a girl travelling with her mother from Benares, and was, after considerable difficulty, arrested at Arrah, sent up for trial and sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment. The editor remarks that such atrocities on the part of Eurasians are increasing every day, and Government should endeavour to put them down with a strong hand.

HINDUSTANI,
10th October 1906.

The editor of the Hindustani (Lucknow), of 10th October, refers the inadequacy of the sentence, and points out that it will be impossible to prevent these atrocities unless crime of this class is punished with the severity it demands.

A serious railway accident.

ADVOCATE,
7th October, 1906.

61. Referring to a serious railway collision on the Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway, which took place a few miles from Naini Tal on 23rd September, between the Lalkuan station and Pilibhit, the Advocate (Lucknow), of 7th October, says that the Rohilkhand Kumaun Railway deserves condemnation at the hands of Government for the manner in which the line is worked. The railway might be unmindful of the convenience of the passengers, but it should not be allowed to hazard the lives and limbs of the people using it.

ANAND,
9th October, 1906.

Collision on the Rohilkhand-Kumaun Railway.

62. The Anand (Lucknow), of 9th October, condemns the guard and the driver whose gross carelessness led to the collision on 23rd September last between Lal Kuan and Pilibhit on the Rohilkhand-Kumaun Railway, which caused immense damage to person and property. The editor invites the attention of Government to the management of the line, and remarks that the administration of a line on which employés will not hesitate to risk the lives of a whole train of passengers merely to gratify their passion for smoking cannot fail to be regarded as rotten.

UNION GAZETTE,
7th October, 1906.

Inconvenience to passengers at the Bareilly Junction.

63. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 7th October, invites the early attention of the Traffic Superintendent of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway to the great inconvenience caused to the public in general, and to female passengers in particular, owing to the exclusion of ekkas from the station yard at Bareilly Junction, and suggests that early steps should be taken to remove the grievance.

UNION GAZETTE,
7th October, 1906.

Separate waiting rooms for female passengers at Bareilly Junction.

64. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 7th October, expresses its extreme regret at the inattention of the authorities of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway to its repeated proposals suggesting the desirability of separate waiting rooms for female passengers at the Bareilly Junction. The editor invites their early attention to the matter and points out that, unless early steps are taken, he will feel it his duty to memorialize the Local Government in this behalf.

UNION GAZETTE,
7th October, 1906.

Railway employes on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

65. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 7th October, expresses its strong disapprobation of the injustice of the Railway Authorities in filling up vacancies by entertaining new hands in the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway to the utter disregard of the claims of those who have recently come under reduction. The editor suggests that the Traffic Superintendent should direct district officers to see that the latter receive preferential treatment.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
8th October, 1906.

Catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

66. The Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad), of 8th October, deplores a reversion to the old system for providing catering arrangements, and thinks that the contracts given to Chunni Lal and Muhammad Husain have been cancelled merely because there is a tendency to depreciate everything introduced by Mr. Pope. The editor asks if it is not the duty of the Local Government to stop personal animosities, in so far as they tend to endanger public convenience.

UNION GAZETTE,
7th October, 1906.

Suggestions for concessions during the urs fair at Pilibhit.

67. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 7th October, says that, regard being had to the large gatherings of people on the occasion of urs (a religious ceremony among Muhammadans) at Pilibhit, it seems desirable that the Railway authorities on the Kumaun line should, in future, arrange to carry passengers by special trains. The editor also suggests the desirability of a single fare being charged for the double journey during the urs.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
8th October, 1906.

Insufficiency of waggons for traffic on the East Indian Railway.

68. The Kanauj Punch of 8th October, points out that trade, especially in Delhi, is suffering considerably owing to the insufficiency of waggons on the East Indian Railway and regrets that no steps have been taken so far to remedy the evil, in spite of the fact that its existence has been remarked by the Punjab Chamber of Commerce also.

HINDUSTANI,
10th October, 1906.

Proposed increase in the salary of employes on the Bengal-Nagpur Railway.

69. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 10th October, says with reference to the proposed increase in the salaries of European and Native Guards, Station-masters and Signallers, on the Bengal-Nagpur Railway, that there is a great disproportion between the increase proposed to be given to Native and European employés, and it is all the more to be regretted because the natives have to work hardest. The editor does not however feel surprised at the disproportion as the same state of affairs exists on Government lines, and is not looked upon as objectionable.

VII.—POST OFFICE.

ALMORA AKHBAR,
30th September, 1906.

Postal complaints.

70. The editor of the Almora Akhbar of 30th September, while referring to the arrest of a postal peon on a charge of effacing stamps from letters, says that the administration of the department demands close scrutiny, and that if Government does not take immediate steps to remedy its existing evils, it will soon lose all public confidence.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th October, 1906.

The Muhammadan Educational Conference.

71. The editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 5th October, regrets to find that the local committee of the Muhammadan Educational Conference has failed to do any practical work, and suggests the appointment of stipendiary teachers, for imparting religious teaching at public and Government schools, and the necessity of ascertaining the number of educated Muhammadans in Moradabad before the ensuing conference.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th October, 1906.

The mosque at the Budaun Railway Station.

72. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 5th October, expresses a hope that Government will direct the fencing wall built by the Railway authorities in front of the mosque at Budaun to be pulled down before His Honour, the present Lieutenant-Governor makes over charge of his office to his successor.

ARYA BANDHU,
for September, 1906.

Religious discussion between Aryas and Muhammadans.

73. The Arya Bandhu (Meerut), for September, says that the Aryas and Muhammadans have arranged to hold a large meeting at Bijnor where each community will adduce its reasons in support of the superiority of its faith. The discussion will continue from 29th September to 18th October. The terms agreed upon have been signed by both parties and will bind them in their speeches and actions during the discussion.

BHARAT JIWAN,
8th October, 1906.

Chamar and sweeper converts in the Arya Samaj.

74. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of 8th October, deprecates the practice of including chamar and sweeper proselytes in the Arya Samaj, and refers to the appointment and subsequent dismissal and prosecution of a chamar who took precautions to conceal his origin, entered the Police Department under an assumed name and mixed freely with Hindus of various castes until discovered.

MUFID-I-AM,
8th October, 1906.

The Islamia Company, Agra.

75. The Mufid-i-Ám (Agra), of 8th October, feels highly gratified to find that the Muhammadans of Agra have opened a shop for the supply of victuals with a capital of five thousand rupees; and hopes that this will be the first step in developing the commercial instinct of, and promoting trade in their community in Agra.

Mr. Morley, and India.

HINDI PRADIP,
October, 1906.

1. THE Hindi Pradip (Allahabad) for October, regrets to notice that Mr. Morley has so far done nothing, to fulfil public expectations, and feels much disappointed at his attitude towards the partition of Bengal, and the supersession of the claims of Mr. Gupta to the Lieutenant-Governorship of the new province.

The Muhammadan deputation.

GAUHAR-I-SHAHWAR,
October, 1906.

2. The editor of the Gauhar-i-Shahwar (Lucknow), for October, says that the meeting held on 16th September consisted chiefly of Muhammadan vakils and barristers, and cannot be said to have been representative. He is glad to see that it was not held within the four walls of the Aligarh College, expresses a hope that the Sunnis will take due care to ensure the security of the rights and privileges of the Shiah community, which is in a minority, and points out that it was only due to a want of confidence that the Muhammadans held themselves aloof from the Indian National Congress.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
8th October, 1906.

The Áwáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of 8th October, received on 15th October, says that the younger generation of Muhammadans is not satisfied with the reply of the Viceroy, which they look upon as consisting of hollow promises, and that public opinion is to the effect that they will hold a political conference at the close of the educational conference at Dacca and settle their future programme. They believe that they cannot secure their political rights and privileges without agitating in the matter.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
10th October, 1906.

The Aligarh Institute (Gazette) of 10th October, says that the members of the Muhammadan deputation deserve thanks and congratulations for their pains, and for the tact with which they have acquitted themselves of the duties imposed on them by their community. They command the respect of their community, and hold a respectable position in the eyes of Government. The editor regrets to find that certain congress organs wish to detract from the importance of the deputation, and asks how the mere fact of certain individuals not joining the deputation can be interpreted as indicative of their dissent from the views expressed in the address, and, even supposing this to be really the case, what value can their voice have against that of a large representative body. He thinks that the allegation, that the representations contained in the address are only a repetition of the requests contained in the resolutions of the Congress, is made solely with a view to annoy the members of the deputation, and says, after enumerating the various points of difference between the Hindus and the Muhammadans, that the latter are prepared to co-operate if the former can yield on those points.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th October, 1906.

The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 12th October, says that the Muhammadan deputation was a representative body, that the Hindosthan, which is a hostile Hindu organ credits the address with enviable moderation and intelligence, and that the unanimous verdict of the Congress organs that the Muhammadans must have been much disappointed at the reply of the Viceroy, is unsound. The editor is of opinion that the Muhammadans should continue to agitate, and are sure to succeed if they can establish a political association of their own.

OUDH AKHBAR,
13th October, 1906.

A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar, (Lucknow) of 13th October, says that the delegates of the Muhammadan deputation were led to think that His Highness Agha Khan is against the partition of Bengal, and were sadly disappointed in him in consequence. The Hon'ble Nawab Saiyad Muhammad strongly objected to the view expressed in the address about the Hindus not voting for the election of Muhammadans to the Council, unless assured that they would support the rights of the Hindus. The Nawab himself was elected to the Supreme Council by securing the votes of the non-official Hindu members of the Madras Council, and looked upon the views expressed in the address on this point as an open attack on himself. The correspondent is surprised to find Khan Bahadur Sirajul Islam subscribe to the address, in view of the fact that he was elected to the Bengal Council by Hindu members.

OUDH AKHBAR,
13th October, 1906.

The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 13th October, says that the Viceroy dwelt at length, in his reply to the Muhammadan deputation, on the measures taken by the British Government ever since 1782, to afford them facilities in educating their children, and that it naturally follows that the Muhammadans themselves are to blame if they have not profited by these favours conferred by Government. Lord Minto attributed the restlessness of the younger generation of Muhammadans to education. He pointed out that political rights can be conferred only on their making sufficient progress in education, that the Western form of Government by representation cannot be regarded as an innovation in India, which is now British India and has had the advantage of Western civilization and institutions for over a century, and that these cannot but prove beneficial to the Indians. His Excellency has very clearly pointed out that the political rights of the Muhammadans will be duly secured when a change takes place in the form of Government.

OUDH AKHBAR,
15th October, 1906.

The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 15th October, says that the views expressed in the address are not in harmony with those of the young Muhammadans, that the Viceroy dwelt on the steps taken by the British Government ever since 1782 with a view to facilitate the education of the Muhammadans, and insinuated thereby that it is their own fault if they have not profited by the National schools and colleges established in addition to the Government institutions, and that there is no reason to be afraid of competitive examinations. His Excellency pointed out that if the Muhammadans deserve credit for their silence, the Bengalis deserve it no less for their agitation, and candid expression of their views to the Government.

OUDH AKHBAR,
16th October, 1906.

The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 16th October, says that the younger generation of Muhammadans is not at one with the aims and objects of the deputation, and it is understood that a political conference will be held at Dacca, with very much the same aims and objects as the Congress has. It is also pointed out that His Highness Agha Khan does not feel quite satisfied with the reply given by the Viceroy, and is thinking of organizing a second deputation.

ZUL QARNAIN,
14th October, 1906.

The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of 14th October, says that the tone of the address presented by the Muhammadan deputation affords a marked contrast to that adopted by the Congress leaders, and has been praised even by certain Congress organs for its moderation and absence of prejudice. The editor feels surprised to see that the address is pronounced on the one hand to be an adaptation of the views of the Congress, and on the other to have been brought about by certain Anglo-Indian wire-pullers. He regards it as the outcome of the hostile attitude of the Hindus, and alleges that the idea originated from Haji Muhammad Ismail, Rais of Dataoli, who communicated his views to leading Muhammadans in all parts of India, and invited them to express their opinions at the meeting subsequently held at Lucknow. He thinks that the Congress party is offering hostile criticism merely because the Muhammadans are now aspiring to place themselves on the same level with the Hindus.

TAFRIH,
14th October, 1906.

The editor of the Tafrih (Lucknow), says in its issue of the 14th October, that the newspaper world does not approve of the aims and objects of the deputation, as they are not calculated to promote friendly relations between Hindus and Muhammadans; that the Viceroy's reply distinctly deprecates the policy of setting Hindus and Muhammadans against one another, as it tends to injure not only the two communities, but also the stability of the British Government in India, and that His Excellency considers it extremely desirable that the Muhammadans should acquaint themselves with Western principles of Government. The Viceroy thinks that Hindus and Muhammadans should both be dealt with alike. The editor adds that the general impression conveyed by the address is, that the Muhammadans wish to work independently of the Hindus, and hopes that enlightenment will eventually open their eyes to the mistake they are making, and convert them into fast friends of the community they now look upon as unsympathetic. He thinks that the deputation is the forerunner of the political agitation that will before long throw the entire Muhammadan community in ferment.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
15th October, 1906.

The Nasim-i-Agra of 15th October, says that the reply of the Viceroy leads one, at first glance to cherish very high hopes but when examined closely, is found to lead to no practical results. The editor is of opinion that a combined deputation from Hindus and Muhammadans would have been sure to bring about good results ; and that separate representation by the two communities is sure to widen the gulf already existing between them.

HINDUSTANI,
17th October, 1906.

The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 17th October, says that His Highness Sir Agha Khan has clearly said that he would not join the deputation if the address dealt with matters like the resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller, or the partition of Bengal, and that he himself is opposed to the partition. The Hon'ble Nawab Saiyid Muhammad likewise has made no secret of the fact that he held himself aloof on the ground, that the delegates would not exclude from the address their remarks about Hindus electing only such Muhammadans to the Council as humour them irrespective of the interests of their own community.

AL BASHIR,
16th October, 1906.

The editor of Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 16th October, says that the remark of the Prakash, a leading Arya paper of Lahore, pointing out that eighty per cent. of the Muhammadans are converts from the low classes of Hindus is inaccurate, and even if its accuracy be taken for granted, caste distinctions are not observed amongst Muhammadans. He argues therefore that the contention regarding the minority of the Muhammadans is of no value.

AL BASHIR,
16th October, 1906.

Al Bashir (Etawah), of 16th October, says that the Hon'ble Nawab Saiyid Muhammad refused to join the deputation probably because he felt offended at having to make room for His Highness Agha Khan, who was not expected to return in time to take the leadership of the deputation. The Muhammadans of Lucknow besides did not elect the Hon'ble Nawab as their representative in the deputation, hence the difficulty in retaining him amongst the delegates

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
16th October, 1906.

The editor of the Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), says in its issue of the 16th October, that the success that has attended Hindu agitation has contributed considerably towards the presentation of the address by the Muhammadan deputation, that the leaders of the Congress must be highly gratified to see that the Muhammadans, who have held aloof hitherto, have now followed their example, and asks if any one can point out the difference between the aims of the Congress and of the Muhammadan deputation. He advises Hindu editors to refrain from making remarks calculated to disparage the deputation, and asks the Muhammadan editors to cease to cavil at the agitation in Bengal and at Congressmen. He exhorts the Muhammadans to join the Congress, and to make a united effort to secure their rights and privileges, which alone can impress Government with their importance as a nation, and suggests that they can settle minor differences between themselves. He further points out that the leaders of the Congress will hail their Muhammadan brethren with delight, if they wish to join them, and the Muhammadans will save themselves the trouble of collecting large sums of money to meet the expenses of their agitation, here and in England, and will avoid many other difficulties more or less formidable. The Congress is supported by a number of eminent European gentlemen, and the Secretary of State for India has himself not only spoken highly of its aims and objects, but has also pointed out that it is calculated to conduce to better administration, and to promote the interests of the country. He concludes with the suggestion that the Muhammadan deputation should make common cause with the Congress in political matters, and should have a separate conference of their own to promote their educational and social interests.

The Shiah deputation to the Viceroy.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th October, 1906.

3. The editor of the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), evinces much concern in its issue of the 16th October, at learning that the Shiah Muhammadans feel dissatisfied at the minority of their representatives in the Muhammadan deputation, and propose to submit a distinct representation of their needs and requirements to the Viceroy. He exhorts the Shiah Muhammadans to refrain from taking such a step, as it will prove fatal to the interest of, and redound great discredit on the entire Muhammadan community, and concludes with expressing a hope that Government will not approve of such a course.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th October, 1906.

The political education of the Indians.

4. The editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), says in its issue of 12th October, with reference to the remarks about the necessity of further gradual training before the representative form of Government is conferred on the Indians, that the Indians have not been allowed a free voice in the Municipal Boards, that independent opinion was stifled and everything was done to secure a large majority of sycophants who would support the views of the district authorities in the Board. He points out that the Indians can give ample proofs of their merit if Hindus and Muhammadans are represented by a fixed proportion of their members, elected by their own communities, and are allowed to work without the domineering influence of a European chairman.

ALAMGIR,
15th October, 1906.

Political agitation.

5. The Alamgir (Aligarh) of 15th October, says that political agitation is inconsistent with the laws of nature, nor are examples wanting in the past history of the world. The editor says that he is not afraid of opposition from Government, but regrets to find his Muhammadan brethren holding themselves aloof in the matter. He feels gratified, however, at finding some leading Muhammadans appreciate the Congress movement, and hopes that the time is not far distant, when the Muhammadans as a community will begin to sympathize with the Congress, which has dedicated the first twenty years of it existence to the promulgation of political education.

TAFRIH,
14th October, 1906.

The future of India.

6. A correspondent in the Tafrih (Lucknow), of 14th October, says that it is impossible that Hindus and Muhammadans should ever work in harmony, and that, should Indians be left to themselves, each community will endeavour to set up its own ruler, so that internal dissensions will necessitate the interference of foreign powers.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th October, 1906.

The policy of the Anglo-Indian Press.

7. The editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), says in its issue of the 12th October, that the double dealings of the Anglo-Indian Press in announcing the inoffensive character of the strikes on the one hand, and in attributing them to political agitators on the other, have eventually led to the exclusion of Indians from lucrative appointments carrying decent salaries, and to the consequent opening of a fresh field for the employment of Eurasians.

TAFRIH,
14th Ocober, 1906.

The Anglo-Indian Press, and the Indians.

8. The editor of the Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 14th October, says that the agitation created over the alleged coronation of Babu Surendra Nath has hardly ceased, when the Bombay Times finds another matter for complaint in Mr. Tilak's reception at Belgaum, which it appears was nothing beyond a procession arranged to receive and escort him back to the railway station. He remarks that the Anglo-Indian Press seems to have combined to wrong the Indians, and it is often that they succeed in impressing Government with ideas injurious to Indian interests.

ANAND.
16th October, 1906.

The English Press on the present situation in India.

9. A correspondent in the Anand (Lucknow , of 16th October, writes from London that the resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller, and the coronation of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji have given occasion to much hostile criticism of the Congress in certain leading Conservative journals, and suggests that Indians should be very guarded in their acts and speeches. He refers in particular to the reproduction of the remarks of the Amrita Bazar Patrika, on the death of Lady Curzon in the London Times of 13th September, eulogizes Sir Henry Cotton and Mr. R. C. Dutt for their strenuous efforts on behalf of India, and announces the visit of Mr. Samuel Smith, a pro-Indian member of Parliament, to India in December next to study the causes leading to the present discontent in Bengal.

TAFRIH,
14th October, 1906.

The Pioneer on the letter from the Faoji Amin.

10. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 14th October, while referring to the views expressed in the Pioneer about the letter from the Faoji Amin, says that the remarks are in no way severe, and should have no value with thinking Indians. The maintenance of a large European force in India, at an immense cost to the public exchequer, belies the assertion of the Pioneer that the British Government does not depend on its military strength. There is no Indian Militia, and even posts carrying a salary of fifty rupees per mensem are as far as possible reserved for Europeans and Eurasians. The editor concludes with the remark that the views of the Pioneer are the outcome of interested motives.

HINDUSTANI,
17th October, 1906.

Representative government.

11. The editor of the Hindustani (Lucknow), says in its issue of 17th October, that both Japan and Persia have realized the usefulness of the representative form of government, that the British Government is prepared to confer it on India, but it is very much to be regretted that a certain community does not find itself prepared to profit by representative institutions, and should anything happen to delay this boon, the British Government will in no way be responsible.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

OUDH AKHBAR,
17th October, 1906.

The visit of the Amir of Kabul to India.

12. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 17th October, after describing the internal peace and prosperity pervading Afghanistan, refers to the friendly relations of the Amir with his brother and noblemen, and considers his position as very enviable in comparison with that of several of the Moghul emperors, whose lives were made miserable by their brothers, kinsmen and subedars. The editor says that the presence of the princes and feudatory chiefs of India at the darbar seems necessary with a view to impress the Amir with the greatness of the British Power, and the pomp and splendour of India. He suggests also the desirability of taking the Amir through certain Native States both Hindu and Muhammadan, so as to enable him to form opinions which may help him to add to the pomp and glory of his own capital.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

OUDH AKHBAR,
19th October, 1906.

Indore.

13. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar of 19th October, takes objection to the unnecessarily large number of Europeans employed at present in Indore, and points out the impropriety of large sums of money being frittered away in maintaining them during the minority of the Maharaja ; he remarks that the state is held in trust by the Resident, as a temporary measure, and anything involving unnecessary expenditure reflects discredit on the British Government.

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ.
4th October, 1906.

The Bareilly swadeshi case.

14. The editor of the Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 4th October, says that the eight accused who had been charged by Daya Ram, medicine-vendor, with preventing the bhishti and the sweeper from attending to his wants have been fined Rs. 50 each, and points out that this is just the way of dealing with persons who wish to force swadeshism on unwilling persons.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
11th October, 1906.

An outspoken judge.

15. Referring to the judgment of Mr. M. Ghose, C.S., District Judge of Cuddapah, on the Kodar Railway collision, the Indian People (Allahabad) of 11th October, says that for once, we have a judge, who, although an Indian, is absolutely fearless and is not afraid to tell the whole truth as he sees it. This is sufficiently startling in a country in which, in many provinces, the judges of the highest courts do not venture to make sweeping remarks against European officers or European railway authorities, placing prestige above justice. A few more instances of such judicial remonstrance would have a wholesome effect, and we would have more of them were the judicial service to be separated entirely from the executive.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
11th October, 1906.

Shooting accident in the Lucknow Cantonments.

16. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 11th October, says that a native coolie, Ram Lal by name, was shot at Lucknow Cantonment by a British Infantry soldier during the third week of September. The soldier ran away in a hackney carriage. The coolie, who was fatally hurt, fell senseless on the ground. The police came to the spot and sent the senseless coolie to the police hospital. The soldier was brought before the Cantonment Magistrate, who held that he was in a state of intoxication and sentenced him to a nominal punishment. Luckily the coolie is recovering.

OUDH AKHBAR,
13th October, 1906.

The editor of the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 13th October, says that the Advocate has given a very exaggerated account of the shooting incident in the Lucknow Cantonments, that the injury was only accidental and was caused by a shot fired at a crow from the carriage in which certain soldiers were returning to the Cantonments. The injury was so slight that the mali (gardener) who was hurt could follow his ordinary avocations on the fourth day from the accident, and the case was compounded with the permission of the Cantonment Magistrate.

ARYA MITRA,
16th October, 1906.

The editor of the Arya Mitra (Agra), of 16th October, disapproves of the action of the Cantonment Magistrate, Lucknow, in letting off the soldier concerned in the recent shooting accident within cantonment limits.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th October, 1906.

Exemption of old and experienced tahsildars from examination as Deputy Collectors.

17. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 12th October, expresses its satisfaction at the exemption from the departmental examination as Deputy Collectors, of old and experienced tahsildars, who were heretofore debarred from well deserved promotion merely because they found themselves unable to pass examinations at an advanced period of life.

RAHBAR,
14th October, 1906.

Summary dismissal of Pandit Ganga Ballabh, Tahsildar of Jhansi.

18. The editor of the Rahbar (Moradabad), says in its issue of the 14th October, that, considering that considerable time has elapsed since the institution of the appeal, it is highly desirable that Pandit Ganga Ballabh, a tahsildar, who has been summarily dismissed from Jhansi, be informed of the result of his appeal sent to the Viceroy, with a request to forward it to the Secretary of State, in case His Excellency did not feel inclined to move in the matter. He also points out that it appears from an article in the People's Herald, which is an Anglo-Indian organ, that the charges brought against the Pandit are false.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
14th October, 1906.

Strange conduct of a court of appeal.

19. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 14th October, says that recently in a case before a court of appeal the whole of the time that the case was being argued, the presiding officer of the court was sleeping. As long as the voice of the pleader arguing the case was heard, the court was asleep and did not and could not hear a single word of the argument addressed to him. A few minutes after the arguments had stopped the Court inquired if everything had finished—"Sab ho gaya ?" and then wrote out his order dismissing the appeal.

Apart from the actual merits of the case, the question may be asked if the appellant's pleader could be said to have been heard in this case ?

When the Court being asleep it was physically impossible for it to hear the arguments addressed to it, can it be said that the pleader was heard ? And if that is the usual practice of the court in question, are the provisions of the Code sufficiently complied with merely by fixing a date for the hearing of the case, and then going to sleep as soon as the pleader for the appellant rises on his legs. Then is it fair and proper for pleaders, knowing the state of things mentioned above, to take fees from clients and make appearance for them knowing full well that there is no likelihood of their being heard ? Why should poor people who have been punished get in addition another punishment of fine in the shape of pleader's fees ?

UNION GAZETTE, 14th October, 1906

The Sub-Inspector of Seohara (Bijnor).

20. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of 14th October, says that Sub-Inspector Muhammad Hadi of Seohara (Bijnor) has been convicted and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment and to a fine of rupees one thousand, in default to one year's additional rigorous imprisonment. The accused was charged with unlawful confinement and was tried by the Joint Magistrate of Moradabad on a transfer of the case from Bijnor.

ADVOCATE, 18th October, 1906.

The rules for the appointment of Deputy Superintendents and Inspectors of Police.

21. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of 18th October, says that the rules for the appointment of Deputy Superintendents have lately been published by the Madras Government, which provide that half of the posts should be reserved for Inspectors of Police, while the other half of these are to go to outsiders and officials in other departments. This is all fair and sound, and considering the claim of police officers to this post we hope our Local Government shall also revise their resolution in the matter, and bestow half of these posts upon inspectors of police.

In this connection we also like to bring to notice the slow promotion of capable Sub-Inspectors to the grade of Inspector. This promotion is generally given according to seniority; and no Sub-Inspector, however brilliant his career may be, can expect to rise to the post of an Inspector within ten or fifteen years of his approved service as a Sub-Inspector; while we see that naib tahsildars of only two years' service are eligible for nomination to the Tahsildar grade. If the rules for the appointment of tahsildars are in toto made applicable to the case of Inspectors of police, and candidates for the latter post are accordingly nominated and selected, we hope to get good results out of it, and the Police Service will become more attractive to honest and educated Indians.

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

SHARARA, for August, and September, 1906.

The Municipal Board of Moradabad.

22. The editor of the Sharara (Moradabad), points out in its combined issue for August and September, the desirability of the local Muhammadans asking for representation in the Municipal Boards on the basis of their proportion to Hindus, and suggests that they should at any rate ask for an equalization in the number of Hindus and Muhammadans on the Board, which can be done without any difficulty by selecting one Hindu and one Muhammadan member from each ward.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 15th October, 1906.

Special officer in the Agra municipality.

23. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 15th October, says that the Agra municipality has been only saddled with extra expenditure by the appointment of the new special octroi officer, as he goes to office at 2 P. M., and cannot dispose of a fair portion of the work in consequence.

ARYA MITRA, 16th October, 1906.

Bad roads in Agra.

24. The Arya Mitra (Agra) of 16th October, invites the attention of the local municipality to the bad condition of the roads from Raj Mandi to Kinari Bazar, and of the stone pavement in Kashmiri Bazar and Mal Bazar.

The editor complains also of the insufficiency of pump-water supply in Agra.

NASIM-I AGRA, 19th October, 1906.

The Municipal Secretary, Agra.

25. The Nasim-i-Agra of 19th October, says, on the authority of the Surma-i-Rozgar, that the Municipal Secretary does not attend the meetings even once a month. The editor ascribes his absence to old age, and to racial favouritism, and says that no one takes any notice of his neglect of duty, though he is paid over twelve hundred rupees per mensem.

BHARAT JIWAN, 15th October, 1906.

Municipal lanterns in Benares.

26. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of 15th October, points out that the municipal lanterns do not burn throughout the night for want of sufficient oil, and thus a large section of the Benares public, who go to bathe in the Ganges while it is dark are put to great inconvenience.

MOHINI,
16th October, 1906.

Octroi in Kanauj.

27. The Mohini (Kanauj), of 16th October, suggests the undesirability of imposing octroi taxes in Kanauj, and points out that such a step will prove ruinous to trade.

(e).—Education.

RAJPUR,
15th October, 1906.

Mayo College, Ajmere.

28. The editor of the Rajput (Agra), says in its issue of the 15th October, with reference to the annual report of the principal of Mayo College, Ajmere, that a class has been opened in the college, with a view to qualify Rajkumars for the better administration of estates, and that they have then to pass the post-graduate examination. The editor suggests that the training given will qualify them to hold high appointments in Native States, and suggests that such employment will be beneficial alike to the interests of the sardars and the states where they are employed.

ADVOCATE,
18th October, 1906.

The three new Inspectorships in the Education Department.

29. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow) says in its issue of 18th October, that the choice for the new Inspectorships in the Education Department must in his opinion be made from assistant inspector's grade. If the Government thinks that certain senior Assistant Inspectors will not prove capable inspectors, juniors might be taken in, but not without sufficient reason.

MURAQQA-I-TASAUAR,
21st September, 1906.

The present system of education in India.

30. The Muraqqa-i-Tasauar (Fatehpur) of 21st September, received on 18th October, says, that the present system of education is not calculated to lead to any beneficial results, and that it overloads the mind and the memory of the student with matter which cannot prove useful in practical life. The editor suggests the desirability of giving sound training in literature, and characterizes the present day student as a Jack of all trades and master of none.

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

RISALA-I-ZAMINDAR-WA-KASHTKAR,
for September, 1906.

Agricultural Banks in India.

31. The Risala-i-Zamindar-wa-Kashtkar (Bijnor), for September, says that India will be reduced to greater straits if any European company is allowed to open agricultural banks in the country, on the responsibility of Government, as the people dealing with such a bank will cease to enjoy the concessions made to them at present by Indian zamindars and bankers during the prevalence of famines. The editor suggests that such banks, if started by Indians, will conduce to the happiness of Indian cultivators.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
8th October, 1906.

Co-operative Bank in Benares.

32. The editor of the Áwáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of 8th October, received on 15th October, strongly advocates the need of a co-operative bank in Benares. He considers these banks to be highly beneficial to both cultivators and artizans, and points out that legislation has set at rest all doubts as to their being ephemeral, and the public can now safely invest their money in these banks to advantage, as the interest given by them is about twice the amount given by other banks.

AL AKHLAQ,
September, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

33. Al Ikhláq (Agra), for September, says that the swadeshi movement is at present agitating the public mind in Agra, that lectures have been delivered there by Saiyid Haidar Raza, B.A., of Delhi, and a swadeshi committee has been formed with Mr. Gobind Sahai, barrister-at-law, as its president, and the editor of the Jásus as its secretary, to promote the interests of the movement.

MOHINI,
12th October, 1906.

The Mohini (Kanauj) of 12th October, says that a mass meeting was held at Dadar in Bombay, on 7th October last, when Mr. Tilak, who was in the chair, pointed out in a stirring speech, that the swadeshi movement is calculated to bring about the regeneration of India, that it is useless to hope for it from the British Government, which rules India by the sword, while Western countries are governed in consonance with public opinion, and that the opposition of a system of Government, which has brought out the present miserable condition of the Indians cannot be regarded as disloyal and seditious. The editor says that the speeches delivered at the meeting were stirring and calculated to influence the public mind.

SANSAR MITRA,
16th October, 1906.

The Sansar Mitra (Allahabad) of 16th October, says with reference to the proceedings of the meeting, that the speeches though calculated to agitate, did not deal with the question properly.

BHARAT JIWAN,
15th October, 1906.

The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of 15th October, invites the public to read a pamphlet entitled "swadeshi prachar ke upai," which the editor says teems with suggestions calculated to do good to the country, and cannot fail to infuse a love for indigenous products and manufactures in the minds of the readers.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
15th October, 1906.

The Kanauj Punch of the 15th October, says that the business transacted with the Manchester firms on the Lucky Day shows that the Calcutta people are not yet acting up to their vows about boycotting foreign manufactures.

ARYA MITRA,
16th October, 1906.

The Arya Mitra (Agra), of 16th October, while referring to the orders given to Manchester firms on the Lucky Day this year, points out that none were given last year, and expresses a hope that the swadeshi movement will continue to make steady progress, and succeed eventually in boycotting Manchester piece-goods altogether. The editor points out that about fifty Indian manufactories have been started in 1905-1906, and says that a reference to the works of eminent doctors leaves no room to doubt that bovine blood is used in the refinement of sugar, and that any information to the contrary vouchsafed by European manufacturers should be looked upon as false owing to interested motives.

Swadeshi sugar.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
8th October, 1906.

34. The Cawnpore Gazette, of 8th October, received on 15th October, says that at a meeting held at Wazirpura (Agra) on 18th September, it was resolved to boycott foreign sugar both by the public and the confectioners present at the meeting. The editor remarks that the matter is attracting public attention in every city, but it is to be regretted that foreign sugar has not yet been totally boycotted, in spite of the fact that the public are well aware of its deleterious effects.

BHARAT JIWAN,
15th October, 1906.

The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of 15th October, says that the Benares public have, at a large meeting held on 10th October, resolved to boycott foreign sugar, and ghi mixed with fatty substances. The meeting was organized by the Hon'ble Munshi Madho Lal, Babu Moti Chand, and Rai Bahadur Goshain Bhawanipuriji. Pandit Shib Kumar Shastri Mahamahopadhya was in the chair, and Pandit Madan Mohan Malvya, Babu Brindaban Behari, vakil, Pandit Dwarka Nath Dube, Babu Ramsinghji, Babu Jagdeo Parshad Gaur, Raja Banaspat Singhji and Swami Prakashnand addressed the audience, which numbered about ten thousand.

The editor exhorts the Benares public to adhere to their resolve, and points out that foreign sugar is deleterious to health, and is refined by impure substances. He advises them not to use foreign sugar merely because it is cheap, and to bear in mind that they have a religious duty to perform; and concludes with the remark that each community is organising a panchayet of its own to control the future use of sugar and ghi in Benares.

ANAND,
16th October, 1906.

The Anand (Lucknow), of 16th October, gives a brief account of the proceedings of the meeting held in Benares on 10th October last, with a view to boycott foreign sugar and adulterated ghi.

ARYA MITRA,
16th October, 1906.

A correspondent in the Arya Mitra (Agra), of 16th October, says that it has been resolved at a meeting held at Kasganj (Etah) to boycott foreign sugar, and exhorts the Vaishya community to abstain from its use.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
19th October, 1906.

The Nasim-i-Agra, of 19th October, says that the local Brahmans have resolved, at a meeting held at Muhammadabad, to boycott foreign sugar on religious grounds.

ADVOCATE,
11th October,
1906.

Sensational swadeshi case at Midnapur.

35. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 11th October, says:—A sensational swadeshi case has been instituted to-day. Babu Pyari Lal Ghosh, pleader, has complained against about 15 shopkeepers of Bara Bazar, dealing in Manchester cloths, under sections 147 and 149, Indian Penal Code, for mercilessly beating a large number of students for persuading buyers not to buy Manchester cloth which these shopkeepers imported in enormous quantities from Calcutta before the Puja. They made a conspiracy in the house of one Ganga Narain Dutt, a big merchant, at dead of night on the 20th September last and beat the students on the 21st September. In going to stop the cowardly assault, Pyari Babu was struck on the head with lathis. They intended to kill him by throwing a large kerosine box at his head, also to kill a young boy by throwing him down and placing their legs on his belly, saying "if one shala is killed no other shala would come to the bazar." Pyari Babu was saved by Babu Upendra Nath Dutt, the Magistrate's peshkar, who was mercilessly beaten for interfering. Babu Deb Das Karan, editor of the Medini Bandhab, too was beaten. The first information was lodged on the same night in the Sadar Thana. Babu Nagesh Chundra Mukerjee, Inspector, and Babu Girish Chandra Sen Gupta, Sub-Inspector, made a careful enquiry and said they would chalan the accused under section 149; but it is alleged that under orders from the District Superintendent of Police, Mr. Castle, they reported the case as one under section 160 and as non-cognizable. The accused also instituted a case in the thana against the students, which has been proved to be false. Mr. M. K. Deb, Joint Magistrate, has ordered both parties to prove their cases on the 20th October next. Doctors, kabirajes, and compounders of the town have resolved not to go to the houses of the accused, until they will atone for their crime. Legal practitioners also intend to do the same when the courts re-open. A special issue of the local paper has been published. The whole district is astir.

SHARARA, for August and
September, 1906.

National dress.

36. The Sharara (Moradabad), says in its combined issue for August and September, that a national dress is essential to union, and points out that similarity in dress should do much to foster patriotism.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
18th October, 1906.

New patriotism.

37. The Indian People (Allahabad) of 18th October, says that the spirit of new patriotism which is inspiring the country at the present moment has much to commend itself, but at the same time it is somewhat disconcerting to the social reformer and the religious teacher. Nobody can object to a nation repairing its dilapidated fortunes by reviving its ancient industries and arts, and swadeshism is to our mind strong enough to stand upon an economic and political basis. But we fear it is neither wisdom nor good policy to mix it up with religion, and even superstition. There ought to be no place for religious anathema, where good economical and patriotic reasons can be pressed into the service of the swadeshist. Why take vows at temples, and brand the breaker of the swadeshi cult as an outcaste and a mlechha when there are more rational, more logical and more convincing arguments available to secure his adhesion to the principle of swadeshism? By all means discard foreign sugar, if you can have your own. We can understand an argument like this. But we cannot contemplate with equanimity the future when pious Pandits are requisitioned to cite scriptures, and tell us that 'the buyer and consumer of foreign sugar is a mlechha and a cow-killer.' All this is reverting to the old old superstitious era, from which we ought to be emerging if we are to fight for our cause like men. From this point of view, we fear we cannot commend the speech of the pious president of the meeting held at Benares, who exhorted the audience against the use of foreign sugar. As regards Bengal, we fear there is yet room there for the elimination of much that smacks of superstition and irrational ritual from the propaganda of swadeshism.

INDIAN STANDARD,
8th October, 1906.

The administration of Sir Bampfylde Fuller in Eastern Bengal.

38. Referring to the administration of Sir Bampfylde Fuller in Eastern Bengal, the Indian Standard (Allahabad), of 8th October, says that the shade of Udai Patni will follow Sir Fuller even after death, and the sentence of death will be passed upon him in the next world by the spirit of Udai Patni whom he has unjustly hanged in spite of the Viceroy's mandate to postpone the execution order. The injustice of Sir Fuller and Lord Curzon reminds us of the story of Surat Raja in that immortal sacred work Chandi. This Raja slaughtered thousands of goats. All these goats killed him one after another in the next life. Sir Bampfylde Fuller slaughtered thousands of our innocent countrymen by proclaiming a reign of terror throughout the length and breadth of the land. The spirits of these martyrs of our country will follow him even after death. Sir Bampfylde Fuller sang his own dirge. He made use of these memorable words :—"A farewell dinner is like reading one's own epitaph. This is my epitaph, the partition was a great measure which demanded an expiatory sacrifice. I am the sacrifice." Sir Bampfylde Fuller takes his stand on a lofty platform and is filled with remorse and compunction. We all feel for his official death.

The Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal and their address to the present Lieutenant-Governor.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th October, 1906.

39. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 12th October, while referring to the remarks of the Lieutenant-Governor in reply to an address presented by the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal, exhorts them to exert themselves so as to be able to claim by right what they now seek as a favour, and thereby avoid the humiliation to which they lay themselves open when told that they should first deserve and then desire what they pray for.

The present situation of Bengal.

TAFRIH,
14th October, 1906.

40. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 14th October, says that Mr. Morley is evincing deep interest in India, and has accepted the office of Secretary of State merely with a view to bring about a satisfactory solution of Indian problems. The editor says on Mr. Gokhale's authority, that the partition of Bengal should not yet be looked upon as an accomplished fact ; that the Bengalis should continue to agitate loyally and constitutionally, and continue to cherish hopes in view of the success that attended the efforts of the Boers, and is likely to attend the Irish agitation in a year or two. He deplores the strained relations between Babu Surendra Nath Banerji and Babu Bipin Chander Pal, points out that the latter has very few followers who are men of little consequence, and that the Congress, which represents the interests of India as a whole, will not fail to put down with a strong hand any attempt to disturb its settled programme. He also views with disapprobation the grudge that Babu Moti Lal, the editor of the Amrit Bazar Patrika bears Babu Surendra Nath Banerji, and attributes it to jealousy.

Policy—Hindus and Muhammadans.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
10th October, 1906.

41. A correspondent in the Aligarh Institute Gazette of 10th October, says that the Muhammadans did not take to Western education for a considerable time on religious grounds, and have in consequence been left far behind the Hindus, who are at present usurping what would naturally go to the Muhammadans if they were equally well educated. He characterizes the agitation of the Hindus, for securing these rights as tending to show that they wish to hold the reins of Government in their own hands, and points out that Government should take steps to repress the Hindus, and to aid the Muhammadans, so as to conduce to the wellbeing and happiness of both communities. He exhorts the Muhammadans in conclusion not to think of agitating in the hope of being able thereby to secure their rights like the Hindus, but to preserve a passive attitude as expressive of their loyalty. He says that such of the Muhammadans as regard the Sultan of Turkey as their Caliph are worse than the Hindus who are agitating for their rights,

The Indians, and the Pioneer.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th October, 1906,

42. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 12th October, says that the intemperate language of the Pioneer has led a large number of its Indian constituents to cease to subscribe for it, and it is therefore that it indulges all the more in virulent attacks on Indians, which however are excusable as being the ravings of a maniac.

The Pioneer, and the Muhammadans.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th October, 1906.

43. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 12th October, says that the remarks of the Pioneer inculcating a policy of friendliness towards Muhammadans, is due to the war waged by the Indian Press in general, and the Bengal Press in particular, aganist the attitude adopted by Anglo-Indian newspapers. The Indians enjoy great privileges under the present rule, which, though foreign, has inaugurated blessings unknown to several countries governed by their own countrymen. The editor says that mutual confidence does not seem, however, to exist between the rulers and the ruled, that the former do not feel genuine sympathy for the latter, and that the British Government should endeavour to confer equal rights on Hindus and Muhammadans alike so as to avoid every possibility of racial animosity.

MUFID-I-AM,
16th October, 1906.

Suggestions made by the native Press to Government.

44. The Mufid-i-Ám (Agra), of 16th October, expresses its approval of the views expressed in the Jásus (Agra) of 7th October, and reproduced at paragraph 51, Selections No. 41 of 1906, suggesting the desirability of Government adopting measures to keep the Press informed of its views regarding the suggestions made in the Vernacular papers.

MUFID-I-AM,
16th October, 1906.

The Press conference.

45. The Mufid-i-Ám (Agra), of 16th October, expresses its approval of the views expressed by the Agra Akhbar, and the Jásus, to establish a Press conference so as to improve the tone and condition of the Native Press, and invites the proprietors and editors of other papers to express their views on the subject.

ADVOCATE,
11th October, 1906.

Mr. Samuel Smith's proposed visit to India.

46. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of 11th October, says that as a close student of Indian politics Mr. Samuel Smith has been much concerned at the growing estrangement of the rulers and the ruled in India. One of the principal objects of his forthcoming visit will be to ascertain the extent and discover the causes of this unhappy alienation ; and if he can be of any use in bridging the gulf which now divides the two races he will consider that his journey was not undertaken in vain.

ARYA MITRA,
16th October, 1906.

The present administration of India.

47. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of 16th October, says that the racial distinctions drawn by Government lead Europeans, Eurasians and even Native Christians to look down upon Indians, irrespective of their calling and position in life, and points out the gross injustice done even in courts of law in cases in which Europeans and Eurasians come in as aggressors or as complainants. The editor says, that the Government has of late begun to show undue favours to Muhammadans, merely with a view to hamper the progress of the swadeshi movement, to keep up foreign trade and to widen the gulf between Hindus and Muhammadans.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
16th October, 1906.

The salvation of India.

48. The editor of the Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares) says, in its issue of 16th October, that it is impossible that India should make any real progress, until people of various opinions are brought on one common platform, and that this common platform should be the Indian National Congress. He suggests the desirability of inviting the leaders of different religions to a conference at the close of the ensuing Congress, with a view to consider how this end can be consummated.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th October, 1906.

The begar system.

49. The Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of 12th October, says that Government pays those impress to work on its account, but the begar system is odious all the same, because the subordinate staff impress a large number of men to serve their own ends when only a few are wanted, and oppress people who cannot well afford to spare themselves from other more inportant duties calling for their immediate attention.

ZUL QARNAIN,
14th October, 1906.

Pandit Jwala Prasad, District Magistrate of Etah.

50. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of 14th October, says that the case regarding the outrage of certain women on the Bareilly-Soron Railway by four Eurasians was decided by Pandit Jwala Prasad, District Magistrate of Etah, and not by the Joint Magistrate of Budaun, as misrepresented by the Hindustani. The editor asks if Pandit Jwala Prasad does not feel the qualms of conscience at having perverted justice in this particular case, in which the accused were Eurasians, who are in a way connected with the conquering race, and the party aggrieved were poor helpless Indian women.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
18th October, 1906.

The Indian People (Allahabad), of 18th October, says that Pandit Jwala Prasad, District Magistrate of Etah, is just now coming in for a good deal of abuse and vilification at the hands of some Muhammadan journalists. The charges are of the usual trumpery character such as generally are bred in the impure atmosphere of the rabid and biased journalism. It would be an unmerited advertisement to the offending papers to put their editors into court. Mr. Jwala Prasad is well-known as an exceptionally able executive officer, and it is because he unites to his ability a zeal for efficiency and high standard on the part of his subordinates, that we suspect that grossly wild and scurrilous charges are levelled against him. The sum and substance of those charges is that he is partial to the Hindus and has dealt harshly with his Muhammadan subordinates. There is nothing original about the calumny, for those who have any experience of the mofussil will be able to recollect many instances in which the reputation of absolutely fair officers—Europeans and Indians—has been sought to be tarnished in this manner. Newspapers, which make it their occupation to supply their readers with no better stuff than such miserable calumnies, can hardly hope to command any respect at the hands of right-thinking people, and it would we fear be investing them with too much importance and conferring an honour which they hardly deserve to appeal to law against them.

The Pioneer, and the Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow.

OUDH AKHBAR,
17th October, 1906.

51. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 17th October, says with reference to the attack of the Pioneer on the Deputy Commissioner of Lucknow, that it is high time that the Lucknow public should meet to gauge public opinion regarding the attitude of the Allahabad daily, and then invite the attention of His Excellency to the matter with a view to put a stop to remarks of a similar nature in future.

Fireworks.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th October, 1906.

52. The Rohilkhand Gazette, (Bareilly), of 16th October, says that it has been resolved, at a meeting, held in Bareilly, to move the Government to take preventive measures against the use of rockets and other fireworks within municipal limits. The editor expressed a hope that Government will stop the use of such fireworks by means of legislation.

Provincial Conference.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
18th October, 1906.

53. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 18th October, says:—We have been asked by one of the leaders of public opinion in these provinces to announce that it is proposed to hold a Provincial Conference at Allahabad during the Easter vacation next year. Attempts have been made to secure an earlier gathering, but for one reason or another they have failed. He only hopes that the expectation raised in the public mind will be fulfilled then.

Death caused by wild animals.

MUSAFIR,
15th October, 1906.

54. The Musafir (Agra), of the 15th October, ascribes the destruction of thousands of lives by wild animals to the action of Government in having disarmed the Indians who, the editor suggests, should be proud of this special favour conferred on them by the British Government.

V.—LEGISLATION.

The election for the Supreme Council.

HINDI PRADIP,
for October, 1906.

55. The Hindi Pradip (Allahabad) for October, says that the members of the Local Council were influenced by self-interest, in electing the representative for the Supreme Council, and it is unfortunate that the gentleman elected will neither have independent opinions of his own, nor devote himself entirely to the public cause.

Separation of executive and judicial functions.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
14th October, 1906.

56. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 14th October, says that in a recent case in these provinces, which is still under trial in the court of a District Magistrate, the investigating police officer did not like to send up a witness for the prosecution for being examined in court on account of his previous conviction. Subsequently the same witness was examined for the prosecution, and on the investigating officer being questioned as to the reason of his not sending up the said witness when he first sent up the case for trial, the said officer was hesitating to give a reply when the trying officer (District Magistrate) suggested to the said officer that he had admitted to him outside the court, in fact in the District Magistrate's bungalow, that he had not sent up the said witness owing to his having a previous conviction, and that it was at the District Magistrate's own suggestion that the witness might be sent up for examination that the said witness was subsequently put forward. All this consultation, advice and suggestion to the investigating officer as how to conduct the case for the prosecution and what witness to produce took place in the trying magistrate's house behind the back of the accused and his counsel.

Further on during the hearing of the said case the same magistrate was not willing to allow further cross-examination of certain witnesses after the framing of the charge, and insisted on the witnesses for the defence being examined. On objection being made by the accused's counsel to produce evidence for defence before the close of the case for the prosecution, the magistrate was extremely offended and said addressing the Prosecuting Inspector, "Let them play their own game, you go on with your own work. If they say the prosecution is not closed, you put in the names of other witnesses for the prosecution to be examined. You have lots of other witnesses, let them be examined. Put in a list at once. I will see what I can do," or something to this effect. And a further list of some half a dozen further witnesses was put in after the framing of the charge and the examination and cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and the statements of the accused, simply because the counsel for the accused claimed their legal right of further cross-examination after the framing of the charge and in the case of one of the accused, who had not appeared at the earlier stages of the proceedings, the first chance of cross-examination of the most important witnesses in the case.

On the counsel for the accused taking strong objections at the use of the word "game" to his attempts to exercise his undoubted legal rights, the Magistrate remarked, "You call it the exercise of your legal rights? You know this case is known as the most scandalous case of this district," and thus ended that day's proceedings. The magistrate ultimately granted the request of the accused's counsel for cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and has postponed the hearing of the defence till the said cross-examination is finished. He has further directed the prosecution to call a number of fresh witnesses as mentioned above.

OUDH AKHBAR,
15th October,
1906.

Proposed amendment of the Taluqdars' Act.

57. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbár, of 15th October, says that since it is understood that the Oudh Taluqdars' Act is to be amended, it will not be out of place to suggest that provision may now be made for the protection of the interests of such members as are entitled to maintenance, that if a taluqdar proves himself unworthy to look after his affairs, the management of the estate should devolve on the next worthy and deserving member of the family, and that in case an estate is placed under the Court of Wards it should be entrusted to some deserving member of the family entitled to maintenance, instead of being made over to stipendiary managers and their subordinates, who can have no genuine sympathy with the estate.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th October, 1906.

Female outrage by Eurasians.

58. The editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam, (Moradabad), while commenting in its issue of 12th October, on the inadequacy of sentence on the two Eurasians who outraged the modesty of certain Jaipur women on the Soron-Bareilly Railway, says that it would be nothing short of transportation for life, if the offence had been committed by an Indian, and the complainant were a European lady. He regrets that Babu Mohan Lal who was instrumental in the working out of the case was given to understand indirectly that he must resign, and has since been thrown out of employment. In conclusion he points out that the said Babu has done a great national service, and hopes that some well-to-do Indian will be forthcoming to help him in earning his livelihood.

TAFRIH,
14th October, 1906.

Outrage on a Hindu girl by a European guard.

59. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 14th October, says, with reference to the outrage of a Hindu girl by one Mr. Alexander, a guard on the East Indian Railway, that such assaults are becoming numerous and the sooner they receive the attention of Government the better. The editor invites the attention of the leading members of the Congress to the matter, and censures them for not taking steps to put an end to these atrocities.

The collision on the Rohilkhand-Kumaun Railway.

ZUL QARNAIN,
14th October, 1906.

60. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun) of 14th October, attributes the collision to the inefficiency of the ill-paid guards on the Rohilkhand-Kumaun Railway, who consider themselves responsible agents, and the editor thinks that the low salaries on the line deserve the serious attention of Government.

Reductions on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
8th October, 1906.

61. A correspondent in the Awáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of 8th October, received on 15th October, says that the dismissal of the ticket checkers was brought about with a view to make room for a number of European guards who were in excess, and would otherwise be thrown out of employment. He regrets the dismissal of a number of clerks in the Claims sections whose strenuous and honest work had led to a considerable increase in the profits of the line, and is equally sorry for the clerks in that section whose well-earned promotions have been withheld in spite of Mr. Pope having sanctioned them.

Catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th October, 1906.

62. The editor of the Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), says in its issue of 12th October, from personal experience, that the catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway are still unsatisfactory, that the rates charged are exorbitant and the articles supplied are stale and deleterious to health. He further notes that he produced eye-witnesses in support of his complaint then and there before the assistant station-master, but apparently no action has so far been taken.

OUDH AKHBAR,
13th October, 1906.

The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 13th October, expresses its satisfaction with the existing catering arrangements under the supervision of contractors, and points out that a reversion to the old system is sure to renew the old complaints, as the station master can ill afford to devote sufficient time and attention to the matter.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
14th October, 1906.

The editor of the Rafiq Punch (Moradabad) in its issue of the 14th October, regrets to learn that the Railway Board has decided upon reverting to the old course, of providing refreshments, under the supervision of station-masters, and suggests that such a course is calculated to bring in its train the evils that existed in the past. He invites the attention of Government to the matter, and suggests the desirability of adhering to the existing arrangements, insinuating at the same time that the complaints of the Naiyar-i-Azam are based on interested motives.

Female waiting room at Moradabad.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
16th October, 1906.

63. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of 16th October, says that much inconvenience is caused to respectable females since the female waiting-room facing the platform has been closed.

Remission of tolls on bridges.

HINDUSTANI,
17th October, 1906

64. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 17th October, says with reference to an application from Jains, praying for the remission of tolls to Sadhus belonging to their community, that the exemption should be extended to all Sadhus alike, as the sum realized from them is inconsiderable, and they are put to great inconvenience owing to their keeping no money with them.

Attempt at robbery between Sirhind and Rajpur Junction.

HINDUSTANI.
17th October, 1906.

65. A correspondent in the Hindustani (Lucknow), of 17th October, says that a daring robbery was attempted by a number of bad characters between Sirhind and Amritsar on a female travelling with Babu Lachmi Narayan, her relation, on 19th September, by the Hardwar passenger train. The lady cried out to Babu Lachmi Narayan who was travelling in another Intermediate compartment. He ran to her rescue, and caught hold of one of the offenders, whom he found in the act of throttling the lady with a view to pilfer her ornaments. The accused, however, hit Babu Lachmi Narayan with a stone on the mouth, and thus succeeded in effecting his escape, and breaking eight of the Babu's teeth. The correspondent says that such cases cannot fail to be worked out successfully if Government insists in the matter.

Arrangement for refreshments for Indians.

ADVOCATE,
18th October, 1906.

66. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 18th October, says that now that the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway Company are terminating their present contract for the sale of sweetmeats on the line, the manager would do well to follow in the wake of the Southern Mahratta Railway. It has made, as an experiment, the provision for the sale of hot food, besides other refreshments. A compartment has been suitably fitted up, in which cooked food can be obtained, and washing arrangements are provided. The staff employed are to be selected from the Brahmins to do the cooking, and other food for sale is to be purchased by the Company from Brahmin shopkeepers in Poona and Bangalore, whose names will be a sufficient guarantee of the quality of the articles provided. The compartment will be so arranged as to afford privacy to men and women of high class as well as to Hindu, children. Such an experiment has not yet been made on any other Indian Railway, and Mr. W. B. Wright, the Traffic Manager, is to be congratulated on the attempt to supply a long-felt want by the native travelling public. It is hoped that the native passengers, who will, by this arrangement, be provided with all the comfort and convenience which they hitherto believed only Europeans had enjoyed, will appreciate the substantial advantages they have gained, and avail themselves freely of the convenience.

AL AKHLAQ,

Cow-killing at Sabathu.

67. The editor of Al Akhlâq (Agra), for September, says, with reference to the cow-killing at Sabathu, that Government should take necessary steps to appease the Hindus, and forestall any disaffection on their part, for which the Military authorities are responsible.

INDIAN STANDARD,
8th October, 1906.

The Dasehra Puja at Allahabad.

68. The Indian Standard (Allahabad), of 8th October, says that, during the Puja, Allahabad was the scene of great entertainments and joyous festivities. The rush of people from morn till night, at Dr. Satish Chander Banerji's during the Puja days, and the interest with which they witnessed the ceremony were sufficient to show the great love and faith which the Hindus have in the Divine Mother. We tell the simple truth, when we say that it is owing to such intense faith in the power of the Almighty, that India has still survived from the foreign oppression and tyranny. Let them still work with that entire faith, and believe that in everything they do the Divine hand is present for their guidance.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
12th October, 1906.

Friday prayers in mosques.

69. The Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Gorakhpur) of 12th October, suggests that the privilege of being allowed to go to offer midday prayers on Fridays, enjoyed hitheto by Muhammadan students and school masters only, may be extended to Muhammadan Government servants and litigants in courts.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th October, 1906.

Bande Matram.

70. The editor of the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), resents in its issue of the 16th October, the proposal in the Hindustan of Lahore to use the phrases Bande Matram and Hari Âm side by side with Allah Akhbar, and characterizes the phrase Bande Matram as immoral and wrong. He concludes with pointing out the superiority of the Unitarian doctrine of Islam to the faith of the Aryas who believe in the union of Spirit and Matter, and to that of Christians who believe in the Holy Trinity.

SANSAR MITRA,
16th October, 1906.

The attitude of the local authorities at Umballa towards Hindu festivals.

71. The Sansar Mitra (Allahabad), of 16th October, invites the attention of the Imperial Government to the undue interference of the Local authorities at Umballa with the observance of Hindu festivals.

OUDH AKHBAR,
22nd September,
1906.

The attitude of European Powers towards Muhammadans.

1. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 22nd September, made a strong protest against the attitude of Europeans in depicting Turkey and other Muhammadan powers as badly as they can, without missing an opportunity of magnifying their most trivial shortcomings, while they minimize as best they can, the most atrocious outrages perpetrated by their co-religionists in utter disregard of their much boasted education, civilization, and humanitarianism. The treatment accorded to Turkey of late years, the steps adopted to sever certain of her dependencies, and the forbearance with which the humiliation has been borne by the Sultan, through prudential considerations, have all tended to lay bare the tactics adopted by European powers, and to enlist the sympathies of the entire Muhammadan world in favour of the Sultan. The obstacles thrown in the way of the Hedjaz Railway, the atrocities of Russia towards her Jewish and Muhammadan subjects attended with bloodshed, the violence done to the Muhammadans of Crete only recently, the Civil war that is fermenting Russian society at present,—all tend to point very clearly to the important part that religion is playing in European politics. He invites the attention of European powers to the treatment accorded by the British Government to the Muhammadans as a whole, and of the British Government to their loyalty and faithfulness, as proved by the manner in which they have held themselves aloof from the agitation, now raging all over the country. He points out that the British Government should appreciate the conduct of the Muhammadans, and take steps to ensure that their goodwill and meekness are not perverted into dissatisfaction and disloyalty. He further points out, that justice in their case should be tempered with mercy, and that any deviation from this course should entail severe censure of the officer at fault, and call forth orders forbidding its recurrence in future.

INDIAN PEOPLE.
25th October, 1906.

Boycott in South Africa.

2. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 25th October, says that the treatment accorded to Indians in the South African colonies is too well known to be repeated. All this racial boycott is tolerated as the boycotters are white-skinned; but the moment the Indian breathes of boycott he is denounced as the worst of fanatics, disloyal and seditious. In fact the Indian is being boycotted in his own country.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
21st October, 1906.

Colonists and Indians.

3. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 21st October, says that at Vancouver the landing of Indian emigrants has been forcibly resisted. In Canada Indians are not wanted. In Australia the appearance of Indian traders is resented. In South Africa Indians are treated as outcastes and pariahs, and laws and regulations are directed against them to remind them of their racial inferiority. In Mauritius and Trinidad Indians are wanted only as coolies on the plantations, but if they attempted to pursue a more respectable calling they would be turned out at once. The cumulative effect of all these facts cannot be mistaken. In theory the natives of India are subjects and citizens of the British Empire; in point of ugly fact they are despicable and contemptible in the eyes of their fellow-subjects in the British colonies. This circumstance affords us an instructive glimpse into the difference of character between an Englishman at home and an Englishman reared in the colonies, and the moral degeneration of the Anglo-Saxon race becomes apparent at once. The colonists are so much afraid of any competition that they resent the appearance in their midst of any other people, and the jealousy and contempt displayed by them are brutish. Against them the English Government is quite powerless, for no law in South Africa or Australia directed against Indians has been vetoed by the British Government, the threat of secession effectually paralysing the Ministry.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
21st October, 1906.

Indian coolies in Natal.

4. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 21st October, says while the ill-treatment of Indians in South Africa has become a grave scandal, a terrible story comes of the fate that awaits Indian coolies in Natal. The Times of Ceylon says that on board a ship from Natal to Madras, containing 650 coolies, fourteen deaths occurred on the passage. On board the same ship there was Mr. Milo MacMahon as a passenger. He was very indignant with all that he had seen. He told a representative of the Ceylon paper that the coolies go out from India healthy, strong and active. They are sent out into the swampy districts of Natal where sugar grows best, and there they contract all sorts of diseases, including consumption.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
23rd October, 1906.

The Commander-in-Chief of India.

5. The Nasim-i-Agra, of the 23rd October, feels highly gratified that the appointment of the Duke of Connaught as the next Commander-in-Chief is under consideration, and that the Duke himself is advancing his claim to the appointment. The editor says that India cannot expect the same sympathy from others, as it can from a member of the Royal Family.

ZUL QARNAIN,
21st October, 1906.

The Muhammadan Political Association.

6. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun) of 21st October, says that the "All India Muhammadan Political Association" is not at all a new institution, that the Muhammadan Patriotic Association, founded by the late Sir Saiyid Ahmad and maintained with the same vigour for some time subsequent to his death by Nawab Vikar-ul-mulk, aimed at the protection of Muhammadan interests like the Association now under consideration. The editor says that the Congress papers, while referring to the opinion in the Pioneer that this Association will not imitate the ways of the Bengalis, and the Congress agitators, remark somewhat humorously that its sole business will be to present welcome and farewell addresses.

TAFRIH,
21st October, 1906.

Muhammadan Association.

7. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 21st October, expresses a hope that the Central and Provincial Political Associations of the Muhammadans will not follow the policy propounded by the Aligarh Assocation, which has widened the gulf between Hindus and Muhammadans to a considerable extent. The editor hopes that the political development of the Muhammadans will one day lead them to join the Indian National Congress. He further hopes that prudent Muhammadans will join at once as the desire to dissociate themselves savours of selfishness.

HINDUSTANI,
24th October, 1906.

The forthcoming Congress.

8. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 24th October, says that it has been finally decided that Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji will take the chair at the next Congress at Calcutta and that Mr. Stead has been invited to India and is coming out with six other editors of the English Press, so as to be in time to attend the sittings of the Congress. They will then visit the large and important cities in the country and interview the leading members of the Indian community. The editor notes in conclusion that all party differences in Bengal came to an end on the Partition day when Babu Bipin Chander Pal and his adherents touched the feet of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji and applied the dust of his feet to their foreheads.

ADVOCATE,
25th October, 1906.

The Congress Constitution.

9. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 25th October, says:—To commence with, we think the Congress should resolve to have permanent members, gentlemen distributed all over the country, who, whether they attend a session of the Congress or not, may be asked to contribute ten rupees a year to the Congress Fund. It may not be difficult to secure five to six thousand earnest men in the country willing to support the movement by such a small contribution. Rs. 50,000 thus gained can be utilised for the maintenance of the English organisation, and of an Indian Congress committee which should hold its meetings at least twice in the year at some central place.

It is not at all necessary that we should wait for the inauguration of these Associations before forming an Imperial body. An organisation which will keep the people of all parts of the country in touch with one another would help the new awakening, and we think with Mr. D. E. Wacha and Mr. G. K. Gokhale that no time should be lost in creating one to inaugurate the new movement. If these two gentlemen, along with Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji and some provincial members, were to make an extended tour in all parts of India, they will rouse enthusiasm and in time we shall have an Association worthy of the noble and sacred cause represented by the Congress.

The Muhammadan deputation.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
16th October, 1906.

10. The editor of the Riyaz-ul-Akhbar expresses his dissent in its issue of the 16th October, from his contemporaries who are of opinion that the Muhammadan deputation has not borne fruitful results, and attributes their views to a want of understanding, and failure to interpret Lord Minto's reply correctly.

KAYASTH HITKARI,
24th October, 1906.

The editor of the Kayasth Hitkari condemns in its issue of 24th October the very idea of the Muhammadan deputation as injurious to the interests of Hindus and Muhammadans alike. He inculcates union and advises both communities to work in harmony, as strained relations are calculated to widen the gulf between them.

ADVOCATE,
25th October, 1906.

A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 25th October, says that one is pained to find the Muhammadans calling the majority, meaning the Hindu majority, unsympathetic. He says that if they call the Hindus unsympathetic, is there not a strong fear of the less forbearing amongst them paying back the compliment perhaps with compound interest. Referring to the "lion's share" claimed by the Muhammadans he says that demands such as this give rise to misunderstanding, friction and ultimate trouble, and that the argument adduced by them to strengthen their claim, will not bear scrutiny. In the opinion of the deputation it cannot be denied that the Muhammadans are a distinct community, with additional interests of their own which are not shared by other communities. Harmful talk such as this fills one with feelings of indescribable sorrow. It is painful to find responsible men giving expression to views which are calculated to widen the breach between the two communities, which has been created by the folly of some Musalmans as well as Hindus.

Their talk about development of character is so much twaddle, which he would have left unnoticed had it not been for the fling at Hindu youths. He is only sorry that this address should have contained such an unfortunate sentence as quoted above.

He says that, before India can take her place in the community of nations, her sons, Hindus, Muhammadans and others, must form one nation. They must learn to forget their minor differences and work together in perfect peace and harmony for the common weal. Love begets love and hate begets hate. This policy of mistrusting each other is destructive of all hopes of future progress. The destinies of Hindus and Muhammadans are so indissolubly linked that they sink or swim together. He who wishes to set Muhammadans against Hindus is a traitor to the best and abiding interests of both. He then reminds Indians that "United we stand, divided we fall."

In acknowledging their loyalty to the Crown they, however, say that they have adopted a policy of avoidance in matters of Indian politics. This is true. But the question is, could they do otherwise. Ever since the dawn of the British rule in India, for some political reason or other, the Muhammadans have enjoyed the sunshine of the British grace. Their education and general welfare, as noted in Lord Minto's reply, was the chief concern of the early Viceroys of India, and it has been continued up to the present moment. Withdraw this grace, and the signs of early agitation and discontent, will come into play with great force. The appetite for political changes, kept overfed so long, will break all bounds and work great mischief.

If the Government of India was strong half a century back, it is stronger today after the Russo-Japanese war and Anglo-Japanese Alliance. But it seems that the whole continent of Asia is on the path of progress. Japan accepted the representative system long ago, and that with salutary results. Russia has lost many a life for it and the goal is not far off. China has given indications of it, and Persia appears to have gone half way. None of these places is under the direct influence of the British flag, and in none of them there is such a thing as the Indian National Congress. The Orient, it seems, cannot now go on without such systems as obtain in the West. The British politicians, noted as they are for their foresight and vigilance, have not failed in watching this movement, and thus taking time by the forelock. It is the sagacity and good luck of the present Secretary of State for India that a step forward on the path of advancement has been taken in his régime. He is therefore to be congratulated.

With whatever intentions the plan of presenting the Muhammadan address might have been hatched it does not fail to suggest that the Muhammadans wish to remain a separate entity for ever, that they do not like to be represented by other classes, howsoever generous they may be. Until now the Congress, which has done so much, disinterestedly for all the Indian communities, could not with any show of reason express the views of the Muhammadan community whose ends will not be served if they do not condemn it. This is far from being grateful.

OUDH AKHBAR,
26th October, 1906.

A correspondent (Aghlab Mohani) in the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 26th October, denounces the apathy of Muhammadans towards western culture. He points out that education alone can enlarge their minds, and help them in effecting radical reforms in their community, that they should follow the example of the Bengalis and the Marhattas, and should not expect to secure their rights and privileges so long as they do not adapt themselves to the times. They should never expect that the British Government will ever relish the idea that the Indians should be on a level with them, and hold high offices and appointments. Referring to the Queen's Proclamation of 1858, he points out that, but for the strenuous efforts of the Bengalis and the Mahrattas who are constantly reminding the British Government of the promises therein contained, it would have been a dead letter. He exhorts them to make common cause with the Hindus and to make a united effort to secure the political rights and privileges enjoyed by Englishmen. There are no doubt some Englishmen who sympathize with the Indians, but they find their voice too feeble against that of the nation whose interests clash with those of the Indians. The clamour raised by the Anglo-Indian community over the Ilbert Bill is an instance in point. There is no doubt that Mr. Morley is acting in all sincerity, but it is very much to be feared that his efforts will meet with strong opposition. He (the correspondent) blames the Muhammadan deputation for trying to impress on the Government the desirability of withholding from the Hindus certain advantages on the ground that they (the Muhammadans) are not yet prepared to profit by them.

The editor says that taking things as they stand no definite hopes can be formed on the reply of the Viceroy, that this is due mainly to the split in the camp, and were it not that Nawab Saiyid Muhammad and His Highness Nawab Agha Khan prevailed on the other delegates to eliminate most of the objectionable passages from the address, the Viceroy would have formed a very low estimate of their prudence and intelligence. He suggests that another deputation during the ensuing visit of the Amir of Kabul may lead to beneficial results.

ADVOCATE,
25th October, 1906.

The Muhammadan demand.

11. The London correspondent of the Advocate, says in its issue of the 25th October, that it is of course inevitable that in certain directions the interests of one party will clash with those of the other; and unfortunately, it seems to be the people, not confined to one section, who accentuate these differences. He is no true friend of India, whatever may be the colour of his skin or the texture of his creed, who endeavours to set the two great divisions of the Indian people by the ears. The man who does this is deliberately obstructing the political evolution of the country, and is doing his best to prolong the absolute system of Government which at present prevails. No statesman, however well disposed he might be to democratic reforms, would venture to introduce any drastic changes into the constitutional fabric of India so long as there was enmity between the two great sections of its people. It is the supreme task of the British Raj to hold the scales evenly between these two communities, and no reforms would be entertained by any Government which would render possible the ascendancy of one community over the other. When the people of India have learnt to be Indian first and Hindus, Muhammadans, Christians, or Parsees afterwards, they will have got within measurable distance of the realization of their national aspirations. Referring to Lord Minto's speech he says :—This emphasising of religious differences is greatly to be deplored, but if the approval of the Muhammadan community to the changes which are now on the stocks can only be obtained by conceding to them a definite and assured part in the enlarged deliberative bodies which it is proposed to set up, I think the object to be gained is well worth the sacrifice it involves. The Hindu majority can afford to be magnanimous The concession of one-fourth of the representation to the Muhammadans would not prejudice Hindu interests, and we may even expect that in the practical work of these institutions the lines of demarcation would disappear and that men of all creeds would work together for the common weal.

The prosecution of the Hind Swarâj.

BHARAT JIWAN,
22nd October, 1906.

12. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of the 22nd October, says that Government is making a serious blunder in regarding articles like the one for which the prosecution was instituted, as seditious, that no Indian can ever wish that the British Government should cease to rule India, that the Indians speak out their minds as they expect the British Government to allow them to represent their grievances, and that exhortations to promote indigenous products and to boycott foreign articles cannot be calculated to cause disaffection.

ADVOCATE,
25th October, 1906.

The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 25th October, says with reference to the prosecution of the Hind Swarajya, that this is the first time that any editor in India has been bound down to be of good behaviour. The Government of Bombay cannot be blamed for taking severe notice of reckless writings which do India no good, but give the opponents of the cause of India a chance to run down the entire Press. But the editor expects the Government of Bombay to restrain the spirit of the Times of India, which had been inciting Englishmen against the Mahrattas.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
25th October, 1906.

The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 25th October, says that in the case brought against the Hind Swarajya in Bombay the magistrate held that the article in question was an attempt to promote feelings of enmity and hatred, and accordingly he ordered the defendant to execute a bond for Rs. 300 and find two sureties in Bombay, for a like amount, for his good behaviour for six months. This is exactly what the prosecution wanted. In every case, that the Government has prosecuted a newspaper for sedition, there has always been a conviction, and the accused has no chance whatsoever of getting off. Only in the first case, instituted in Calcutta many years ago, the Judge refused to accept a divided verdict and the accused ultimately escaped by apologising to the Government. Since then there has not been failure in obtaining a conviction in a single case and the Government gets just what it wants. The law of sedition in India is perfect so far as convictions go. No magistrate or judge ever ventures to dissent from the view put forward on behalf of the Government, and as sure as a prosecution is instituted a conviction is bound to follow. In this matter the law has no uncertainties for the accused, has no chance in his favour, and no defence has ever proved successful.

The tactics of the Anglo-Indian Press.

ADVOCATE,
25th October, 1906.

13. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 25th October, says that Lord Minto must have caused great disappointment to the rabid Anglo-Indian Press, in that he did not say hard things against the Bengali Hindus. Otherwise, how is one to explain the omission of an important passage from Lord Minto's speech as published in the Pioneer and Civil and Military Gazette. The sentence appears in the Statesman's report which leads us to believe that if Mr. John Morley makes up his mind to amend the partition, Lord Minto will not stand in his way. We publish the Statesman's report of Lord Minto's reference to the partition question in order to show the importance of the omission :—

> Now I have no intention of entering into any discussion upon the affairs of Eastern Bengal and Assam, but I hope that, without offence to anyone, I may congratulate the Muhammadan community of the new province for the moderation and self-restraint they have shown under conditions which were new to them and as to which there has been inevitably much misunderstanding, and that I may at the same time sympathise with all that is sincere in Bengali sentiment in respect to a severance of long established local connections.

The last sentence given in italics has been omitted in the report, should we say deliberately ? Was it meant that the idea should go forth to the world that Lord Minto does not keep an open mind on the partition question and has no sympathy with Bengalis in what they call their national calamity ?

Signs of the Times.

CITIZEN,
22nd October, 1906.

14. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 22nd October, refers to persistent agitation as being likely to bear fruit ; and quotes the examples of China, Persia and Ireland. Turning then to India it says, " We may well declare the swadeshi movement, the strike of working men, and various other demonstrations made by Hindus and Muhammadans, who seek to achieve national progress as sure signs of the re-awakening of India. Not that some of these movements do not contain germs of a future revolutionary uprising, but we may safely assert that the men who compose the educated class, a few upstarts here and there excepted, will be the last to raise a cry of independence. Extremists among us may prefer to walk their own way, ignoring the Government, but by no means endeavouring to get rid of Government. In certain quarters an excess may at times be of course discernible, but none regret this attitude more than the educated class. The educated class are sure that the practical politicians of England, no matter to what school they belong, are in thorough sympathy with us in our efforts to secure political rights and economic justice. True statesmen of England have fully been able to grasp the idea that if their representatives are once permitted to act in defiance of law and justice abroad, there is no guarantee that they will not be up to the same trick at home. According to these statesmen—and their name is legion—England will gain rather than lose by aiding India in her efforts to be politically great and economically prosperous. Thus it is that we rest content that Indian industries will grow unchecked, and every movement aiming at "India for Indians" will develop and flourish."

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

OUDH AKHBAR,
23rd October, 1906.

The Hindus in Kabul.

15. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 23rd October, says that a considerable number of Hindus have settled in Kabul, that they enjoy the same rights and privileges as the Kabulis, and are invited on occasions of marriages and festivities in the royal family just the same as respectable Muhammadans; the arrangements for feeding them being placed entirely in the hands of Brahmans.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
16th October, 1906.

The Ministry of Rampur.

16. The Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad), of the 16th October, received on 22nd October, says that, considering that His Highness is constantly changing his mind and is guided by whims and caprices in his dealings, it is highly desirable that some reliable Government servant be retained as minister, so as to be able more or less to exercise a check over the actions of His Highness, that every one of the important offices at present is monopolized by a certain Shaikh family of Rampur and it is impossible to expect justice as things stand; that members of General Azim-ud-din's family and of the family of his murderer have once more been brought together in Rampur, and that this throws some light on the rumours that were afloat during the investigation of the murder case. His Highness seems to have all along tried to keep Government servants out of his way. The editor then points out that the presence of a European Government servant at Rampur has always been a source of great satisfaction to the people, and invites attention to the Nawab's conduct towards Captain Mahmud Shah and Saadatyar Khan as illustrating his capriciousness. He invites the serious attention of Government to the existing state of affairs, and suggests that the retention of a reliable Government officer as minister is highly desirable.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
19th October, 1906.

The pamphlets attributed to Ziya-ul-Haq in Rampur.

17. The editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam, says in its issue of 19th October, that an anonymous advertisement has been put in circulation recently, wherein an attempt has been made to show that the pamphlets attributed to Ziya-ul-Haq, have been published with the complicity of the courtiers of His Highness the Nawab of Rampur. He thinks that considering that Abdul Ghafur was not wanting in experience as a police officer, it would not be strange if the pamphlets were found to be his work, or the work of some one of his adherents, the more so as he could have no scruples in causing further harm to Ziya-ul Haq, after having secured convictions against him in Hapur and Aligarh with the help of his friends and relations, most of whom appear as witnesses in the present case. Such an explanation appears all the more plausible as the pamphlets began to appear very soon after the minister had taken over charge of his duties, and as the complaints against him were only nominal while those against the Nawab were of a serious nature.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th October, 1906.

Maulvi Abdul Ghafur Khan, late Minister of Rampur.

18. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 24th October, attributes Maulvi Abdul Ghafur Khan's pilgrimage to Mecca, to a desire to evade coming in as a witness in Ziya-ul-Haq's case and to escape consequent exposure thereby. The editor considers that his evidence is very necessary to the proper adjudication of the case and should not be dispensed with in the interests of public justice.

AGRA AKHBAR,
21st October, 1906.

The Nizam of Hyderabad.

19. The editor of the Agra Akhbar has reproduced in its issue of the 21st October, an article contributed by Maulana Ashhari, an eminent Persian poet of India, who has established by a chain of arguments that the Nizam of Hyderabad should be addressed as Shah. He expresses his concurrence with the views of the Maulana, and commends the suggestion to the serious attention of Government.

EXPRESS,

The Lucknow Cantonment shooting case.

20. The Express (Lucknow), of 18th October, reproduces as follows the complainant's statement sent by a correspondent in regard to the Lucknow Cantonment shooting case, referred to at paragraph 22, Selections No. 41 for 1906 and paragraph 16, Selections No. 42 of 1906:—

"On the 19th September, 1906, at about 1 p.m. I was coming from Sudder Bazar. No sooner I had reached the crossing, a hired carriage containing four gorahs came. One of the gorahs discharged from his gun, and the bullet shot passed through my armpit and I fell down senseless. I saw the shooter running away.

"The police sergeant afterwards took me to the police station, from where I was sent to the police hospital. After some days when I got better the Cantonment Magistrate called and asked me if I wanted to bring an action in the matter against the gorah. I replied 'I am a poor man, please do whatever you think proper.' The Magistrate on this got me paid eighteen rupees by the gorah and thus the case was compromised.

"I am yet suffering from ill-health and have been discharged from the hospital. I never showed any desire for compromise. I have stated all this honestly, and correctly."

ZUL QARNAIN,
of 21st October, 1906.

Mr. Hardy, Senior Member of the Board of Revenue, United Provinces.

21. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun) of 21st October, while expressing its regret at his retirement, says that he has done nothing to be remembered after his departure, though he had every opportunity of doing so, as senior member of the Board of revenue.

Detective police in trains.

22. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 23rd October, while discussing the recovery of the head and the trunk of a man who had been murdered, from a compartment in a train between Ghaziabad and Tundla, suggests the desirability of attaching detective police guards to trains while in transit.

ARYA MITRA,
24th October, 1906.

The police at Agra.

23. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 24th October, while referring to the inquiries instituted into the working of the London Police, on a statement made before the Royal Commission regarding their corruption, says that considering that blackmail is levied in London itself, it is no wonder if the Agra police take illegal gratifications from ekka-walas.

ADVOCATE,
25th October, 1906.

Decree for damages against Inspector Kirby in re Nicholson, complainant.

24. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 25th October, says that he does not understand why the Local Government should come forward to pay the damages and legal expenses borne by Inspector Kirby in defending himself from a suit for damages by Mr. Nicholson. The Local Government ought to have permitted Inspector Kirby to get the Sub-Judge's decree reversed if he was dissatisfied with his decision, but surely the Sub-Judge's decree deserved better treatment, and it is setting a bad example to bear the Police officer's expenses even when a competent Court has found that he exceeded his authority in arresting a respectable gentleman on a groundless charge.

The editor of the Bharat Jiwan (Benares), says in its issue of the 22nd October, that the dealers in vegetables will make greater encroachments and cause considerable public inconvenience, if the municipality permits them to expose their articles for sale under a formal lease, granted in lieu of valuable consideration; and suggests therefore the desirability of leaving things as they are.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
24th October, 1906.

The Benares Municipality.

26. The editor of the Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares) deprecates in its issue of 24th October, the action of the Benares Municipality, in levying a fee of half an anna per head from the poor students of the local municipal school.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
23rd October, 1906.

The Agra Municipality.

27. The Nasim-i-Agra of 23rd October, regrets to learn that the Agra Municipality is verging on bankruptcy. The editor attributes this to the extravagance of the Municipal Board, and, while inviting the attention of the managing committee to the matter, makes special mention of a new appointment created recently and carrying a salary of Rs. 200 per mensem.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th October, 1906.

The proposed park in Aminabad, (Lucknow).

28. The editor of the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 24th October, expresses his sympathy with the owners of house property in Aminabad, who have memorialized the Viceroy to set aside the order of the Local Government sanctioning the laying out of a park in Aminabad (Lucknow).

EXPRESS,
18th October, 1906.

Jobberies in the Educational Department.

30. The Express (Lucknow), of 18th October, asks if statesmanship is really at a discount in the councils of Government, or what else could be the explanation of the jobberies that have been perpetrated in the Presidency College and Government Madrassa College, Calcutta, and the Muir Central College, Allahabad. It was an open secret that some jobberies in the Bengal Educational Department were in contemplation for some time past, and our London contemporary India raised a timely warning against it. The report was however contradicted, but the last issue of the Calcutta Gazette has proved the report to be only too true. Professors of the scholarship of Messrs. Prothero and Percival, who are universally loved by their pupils are unceremoniously bundled out of the Principalship of the Presidency College, because of their dire crime of being pro-Indians, and a junior man is thrust over their head. In the Calcutta Madrassa, Mr. Chapman (by the way, he was formerly a clerk in some bank) will henceforth occupy the chair of the Principal, which was formerly occupied by such learned Oriental scholars as Drs. Hoernle and Stein. It is very interesting to learn that Mr. Chapman has just commenced to read the Persian primer. Well might our Calcutta contemporaries be indignant over such jobberies, and point it as the natural sequel to a policy that foists on a Civilian to the Directorship of Public Instruction—a wrong, which Mr. Morley has, happily, safe-guarded against in future. This mischievous policy has not confined itself within the limits of Bengal. In the United Provinces, we find that Mr. Cox, who is a wrangler of no mean repute is ousted from the Principalship of the Muir Central College by one several years his junior. Jobberies such as these are calculated to breed discontent in the ranks of a most important branch of public service, and are apt to demoralise its members.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
21st October. 1906.

The new Inspectorships in the Education Department.

31. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 21st October, says :—Our esteemed contemporary the Advocate publishes, in its issue of the 18th instant, a letter from "Justice" on the question of new Inspectorships. "Justice" says that it is proposed to appoint two Christians and one Muhammadan to the three posts which have been newly created. Now, it does seem rather curious that the Education Department of the United Provinces, where the Hindus certainly preponderate in numbers, and where they are certainly not behind their Muhammadan and Indian Christian friends in education and intellectual attainments, should contain two Indian Christians and only one Hindu and one Muhammadan Inspector. If it is desirable that the Muhammadans and Indian Christians should occupy high posts in the Department, justice demands that they should begin at the beginning and then rise by force of merit, and not be pitchforked into the service simply on account of their religion. And this brings us to our next point. "Justice" says that of the three men to be appointed two are to be taken from the Revenue Department. If this is really so, it is nothing short of a scandal. We have been told again and again that educational work requires special training and that "the inspecting staff are being relieved of the drudgery of office work and examinations, and are able to devote more and more time to methods of teaching."

* * * * * * *

If as "Justice" says such appointments are in contemplation, we beg to record our protest against Deputy Collectors, who cannot make good Inspectors, and their appointment is bound to create discontent in the department itself.

* * * * * * *

On behalf of the Education Department and of the educated public of these Provinces we request His Honour Sir James La Touche to refrain from perpetrating such an act of sheer injustice on the eve of his departure.

CITIZEN,
22nd October, 1906.

Mr. Ramanand Chatterji, late Principal of the Kayasth Pathshala.

32. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 22nd October, says :—When Mr. Ramanand Chatterji severed his connection with the Kayastha Pathshala, we ventured to hope that students under his leadership might no longer be taught the baneful lesson—at least in Allahabad—that it was the sacred duty even of boys aged 10 and 12 and 14 to learn how to become good citizens, and that it was by no means possible for them to become so, while living in complete isolation from their political surroundings. The proceedings of a meeting held on the 16th instant, over which Mr. Chatterji presided, show how false the hope was that we so fondly cherished. The meeting was attended by Bengali boys for the greater part, some of them so young that if they at all understood what had brought them together they might well be described as intellectual infants. Speeches were delivered containing sentiments and advocating methods, which if they threw our young men into a state of violent mental agitation, would be sure to tell eventually on their intellectual development. Songs were sung, which, if they would transform our schoolboys into so many Shivajis during their school life, would render their subsequent career altogether wild and useless. We maintain that the policy that Mr. Ramanand Chatterji and men of his class have thought it proper to pursue for the reform of evils will render a disservice to our young men; indeed it will be discovered to subvert the laws of discipline and to encourage students to acts of defiance. We wonder whether Mr. Chatterji, when he was in his teens, was taught the methods that he now preaches, and, if he had learnt them then, he would have been what he to-day happens to be. But then Mr. Chatterji at any time does not seem to have cared much for exercise of control, for cultivation of good taste, or for observance of civil manners. To judge at least from his parting-shot at the Kayastha Pathshala authorities, his terrific indictment of the management of the institution in the guise of his annual report, one would, as we have, inevitably come to this conclusion. The report teems with matter of vital interest to the Pathshala and the public at large, and we hope in one of our early issues to consider it at greater length. And in the meantime we conclude with the remark that as we consider an annual report a highly objectionable channel for airing one's private grievances, so do we regard overgrown infants, schoolboys and college students improper instruments for the regeneration of a land.

BHARAT JIWAN,
22nd October, 1906.

The present system of education in Government schools and colleges.

33. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 22nd October, says that the present system of education, as imparted in Government schools and colleges, is not calculated to help Indians in bringing about the regeneration of their country. The editor then quotes the views of Mrs. Annie Besant in support of his contention that British education has proved injurious to the interests of the country by striking at the root of the moral and social culture of the Indians. The editor points out that the text-books selected are not what they should be, the method of imparting education is not satisfactory, and the relations between the master and the pupil are not sincere and sufficiently sympathetic. The system in vogue tends to debilitate the Indian student in every way, and he oftentimes finds poverty staring him in the face at the end of his college career. He then points out that the Hindu University, or an exclusively Hindu National College, can render considerable help in ameliorating the condition of the country, and concludes with exhorting all well-wishers of the Hindu community, raises, rajahs and maharajahs to do what they can to further the cause of the proposed Hindu University.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
23rd October, 1906.

Prevention of crime.

34. The editor of the Kanauj Punch suggests, in its issue of the 23rd October, that crime will be brought down considerably, if the time spent at schools in teaching drill, is set apart for imparting instructions in law, to every school-going student, that these students will exercise a wholesome influence within their family circles and in their neighbourhood, and help them likewise in improving their morals. He is of opinion, that the commission of crime can to a large extent be attributed to an ignorance of law, and this cannot be removed unless steps are taken to diffuse the law of the land amongst the illiterate masses.

HINDUSTAN,
24th October, 1906.

Education in the United Provinces.

35. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 24th October, says that education in the United Provinces has, during the last ten years, marched with rapid strides during the incumbency of Mr. Lewis as Director, and every credit is due to him for the strenuous efforts he has made in this direction.

36. The Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Gorakhpur), of the 16th October, attributes the poverty of India and the famines to the export of Indian grain to foreign countries. The editor thinks that the grasping Indian banker, and the Government are responsible for the existing state of affairs; and cites Sir Henry Cotton and Mr. Digby in support of his views.

SAHIFA,
12th October, 1906.

The partition of Bengal.

37. The editor of the Sahifa (Bijnor), says, in its issue of the 12th October, received on 22nd October, that the Bengalis have so far kept up their agitation, over the partition question with unflagging energy, and have displayed unflinching zeal in promoting the swadeshi and boycott movements throughout the year. He then refers to the circular letters from Babu Norendro Nath Sen and the Anjuman-i-Himayat-i-Islam, Calcutta, prescribing two diametrically opposed programmes for observance on the 16th of October, and points out that they cannot fail to fan the flame of enmity between Hindus and Muhammadans.

QULQUL,
15th October, 1906.

The editor of the Qulqul (Bijnor), of 15th October, received on 25th October, says that the partition of Bengal has brought the Muhammadans of Sylhet and Assam into closer connection with those in India, and has improved the status of the Muhammadans in the new province owing to their preponderance over Hindus. He thinks that Government has done a gross injustice to the Muhammadans by giving precedence to the Hindus who were in the position of a subject race before British rule was inaugurated in India.

RAHBAR,
21st October, 1906.

The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 21st October, says that Mr. Kemp, District Superintendent of Police (Bengal), found himself fixed on the horns of a dilemma at receiving petitions from pro and anti-partition representatives, for permission to celebrate the anniversary of the partition in two diametrically opposite ways, and advised them to arrange the matter between themselves, unless they wanted him to refer the matter to the District Magistrate The editor opines that Mr. Kemp might have overcome the difficulty by granting the pro-partition application and rejecting that of the anti-partitionists.

AL BASHIR,
23rd October, 1906.

Al Bashir (Etawah) of 23rd October, says with reference to the rejoicings of the Muhammadans on the 16th October, that they have been obliged to celebrate the partition with joy and eclat, in order to signify their dissociation from the Hindus, who otherwise would misrepresent matters, and try to make out that the two communities are unanimous in decrying the partition of Bengal. The editor says that the Muhammadans are no less desirous than the Hindus, to improve the resources of the country, but they are not prepared to bear the loses.

OUDH AKHBAR,
24th October, 1906.

The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 24th October, says that the 16th of October was observed with great solemnity in Calcutta, and throughout Eastern and Western Bengal, that the educated Muhammadans appear to be unanimous in regarding the partition as injurious to the interests of both communities, that most of the Muhammadans joined in exchanging rakhis with their Hindu brethren, that most of the meetings held to celebrate the anniversary were presided over by Muhammadans leaders of importance, and that the Calcutta and the Dacca meetings were both great successes. The editor then enumerates the various places where Hindus and Muhammadans made common cause in denouncing the partition as a step in the wrong direction.

OUDH AKHBAR,
25th October, 1906.

The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 25th October, says that the meeting at Dacca was presided over by Nawab Khwaja Muhammad Arzu, member of the family of Nawab Salim-ullah Khan, and was attended by other members of the family. The president pointed out, that the hostile attitude of Nawab Salim-ullah Khan was a personal matter with him, and that he was the only Bengali Muhammadan of any importance who favoured the partition.

The Calcutta meeting was presided by Khan Bahadur Maulvi Muhammad Yusuf, President of the Central Muhammadan Association, whose age, and position as the oldest Muhammadan member of the Bar command the respect of his community. He disapproved of the partition of Bengal, and cited the views of several leading members of the Muhammadan community to show that the educated Muhammadans as a whole view the partition with disfavour. His Highness Agha Khan has been opposed to the partition, from the very beginning. The Central Muhammadan Association, which is the most influential Muhammadan Association in Bengal, expressed its dissent from the partition movement when called upon to express its opinion by Government.

HINDUSTANI,
24th October, 1906.

The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 24th October, says in addition, that the Nawab of Dacca has failed in organizing grand and successful pro-partition meetings, in spite of strenuous efforts and considerable expense. He adds that the 16th of October brought all party quarrels amongst Bengali leaders to an end, and Babu Bipin Chandar Pal amongst many others touched the feet of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji and applied the dust of his feet to his forehead. The editor notes in conclusion, that the proceedings of the 16th October will not fail to convince Mr. John Morley that it is no longer desirable to delay the modification of the orders regarding the partition.

OUDH AKHBAR,
23rd October, 1906.

The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 23rd October, says that no food was cooked in the Bengali homesteads on the 16th October, which leaves no doubt about the sincerity with which the anti-partition agitation is being maintained against the irremediable error made in the partition of Bengal. The agitation has an irresistible force, and the Bengalis feel that if they wish to progress as a nation they must make some sacrifices. Hindus, Muhammadans, Eurasians, Europeans and Native Christians exchanged rakhis with the Bengalis on the 16th of October. Some Eurasians joined the Hindus and Muhammadans, in singing the National anthems. The entire concourse consisted of about a lakh of men, and the meeting was presided over by Maulvi Muhammad Yusuf, Khan Bahadur, President of the Central Muhammadan Association.

ADVOCATE,
21st October, 1906.

The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 21st October, enters a bitter protest against the suppression and misrepresentation of facts in connection with the anti-partition meeting in Calcutta, which the Pioneer has described as a failure. The editor says that such perversion of facts cannot prejudice the English Press, in view of the opinions expressed by Mr. Muhammad Yusuf, Khan Bahadur, the leader of the Muhammadan Bar of Calcutta, and the President of the Central Muhammadan Association, who presided over the anti-partition meeting on the 16th of October, and while addressing over fifty thousand persons, pointed out that the bulk of the Muhammadan community, at least the leaders of the community as represented by the Central Muhammmadan Association had been as much opposed to the partition as the Hindus, and that nothing had happened since, to lead them to change their opinion in the matter. He showed that the Bengali Muhammadans by no means shared the views of the Nawab of Dacca, that Hindus and Muhammadans lived together peacefully and that if bitterness had been created it was due to partition.

The editor then refers to the insulting language adopted by the Nawab of Dacca in speaking of Mr. Gokhale, and suggests that Mr. Morley and the Liberal Ministers should take measures to allay the discontent. He points out that it is very kind of the Nawab of Dacca to assure the Government, that his party consists of loyalists, that he and the gentlemen whom he entertained at Dacca, or at whose expense they were entertained at Machhua Bazar will not harass or force the hands of Government; and adds that Mr. Morley must be now convinced by the protest made by Hindus and Muhammadans alike, that the people have in no way been reconciled to the change, much less feel that they have been benefited.

INDIAN STANDARD,
15th October, 1906.

Union amongst Indians.

38. The Indian Standard (Allahabad), of the 15th October, after dwelling on the present need for union in an article entitled "Vijoya" makes the following remarks :—We invoke the blessings of our Divine mother. We offer up our prayers to Her Divine throne for our success in life, and for our highest welfare for time and eternity. May she look down upon us from the golden battlements of heaven, send down upon us showers of celestial peace and union, inspire us with hope and enthusiasm, enlighten our understandings, and above all may she be instrumental in the inscrutable ways of providence in uniting the hearts of our leaders and of the Patrika, the Bengalee, the Nation and the Bande Matram in particular. May she illumine the darkness of our path and thus hasten the dawn of a bright noble and glorious day upon our country. The streaks of the radiance of the morning sun of hope are visible in the distant horizon. Oh goddess, our Divine Mother! Thou art our Redeemer, Shelter, Hope, Consolation, Buckler, Refuge, Guide to peace, happiness and immortality. Thou art our only Saviour in these days of darkness and gloom. Oh mother Durga obeisance to thee, salutations to thee. Oh Divine Mother to thee we look up for our guidance, not only for all the concerns of this life, but for all our highest welfare for time and eternity.

OUDH AKHBAR,
24th October, 1906.

Union.

39. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 24th October, considers union to be essential to advancement, and exhorts the Muhammadans to observe their religious doctrines with the utmost strictness, as this alone can tend to produce union and friendship.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
16th October, 1906

The swadeshi movement.

40. A correspondent in the Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad) of the 16th October says that swadeshism is a move in the right direction, that trade is more beneficial than service, that technical and agricultural schools should be started to cultivate the commercial instinct of Indians, and that steps should be taken to exercise effective control over Indian imports, as the present system of trade leads to an inevitable drain of Indian wealth.

TAFRIH,
21st October, 1906.

The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 21st October, says that a meeting was held in Benares under the presidency of the Hon'ble Munshi Madho Lal, and vows were made to use indigenous products.

TAFRIH,
21st October, 1906.

The editor of the Tafrih (Lucknow), of 21st October, suggests the formation of a trading company with a large capital, approximating to ten crores, with shops in all the towns and cities in India, to distribute indigenous products all over the country. He is of opinion that this large business concern will afford employment for thousands of idle hands, and advises title-hunters to devote their time and attention to the promotion of the swadeshi movement.

BHARAT JIWAN,
22nd October, 1906.

The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 22nd October, after recounting the steps taken to promote the swadeshi movement, during the course of the year, expresses a hope, that if the Indians continue to work with unflagging zeal for the next eight or ten years, they will find that the country has progressed considerably.

MOHINI,
23rd October, 1906.

The Mohini (Lucknow), of the 23rd October, says that the premoters of the swadeshi movement should continue to work with unflagging zeal during the ensuing year, as the swadeshi movement alone is best calculated to bring about the regeneration of India.

ARYA MITRA,
24th October, 1906.

The editor of the Arya Mitra (Agra), says in its issue of 24th October, that the Marwari cloth merchants have given orders only for 2,500 bales of piece-goods, the balance of the 21,500 bales, for which orders were originally said to have been given, being bales of thread. This shows that English cloth merchants have sustained a considerable loss owing to the progress the swadeshi movement is making.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th October, 1906.

The editor of the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) in its issue of 24th October, while admitting the usefulness of the swadeshi movement, views with strong disfavour, the exclusive boycott of English manufactures, and stigmatizes Mr. Haidar Raza of Delhi, and Mr. Siraj Waiz as two swadeshi coolies with bad antecedents, who have thrown themselves headlong into the movement to earn a name which they have otherwise failed to achieve.

OUDH AKHBAR,
25th October, 1906.

A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 25th October, says that English piece-goods are being constantly passed as swadeshi manufactures, and that unless steps are taken to check this fraud, India can never expect to benefit by the movement, or even to recoup the crores of money now being invested in purchasing machinery.

VASUNDHARA,
October, 1906.

The Vasundhara (Lucknow), for October says, that Mr. George S. Arundel, M.A., presided at a meeting held at the Nagri Pracharni Sabha premises, (Benares), with a view to promote the swadeshi movement, that the President remarked that the movement will bring about the regeneration of India, and that Indians should be proud of wearing indigenous cloth just the same as he was, of using English fabrics. The editor exhorts the public to use indigenous products and eulogizes Mr. Arundel for his disinterested aud outspoken views.

ADVOCATE,
25th October, 1906.

A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 25th October, says, that Meerut has also awakened in right earnest : a grand meeting of the swadeshi movement was held under the auspices of the Indian Union Association, a body of which was constituted a few months back, on the 16th October, the memorial day of the Indian nation and the birthday of the swadeshi movement The spacious enclosure of Pandit Ganga Ram's Dharamshala was filled with about 2,000 persons, Hindus and Muhammadans. Babu Kali Pado Bose of the local bar was in the chair, and Saiyid Haidar Raza and Mr. Sen of Delhi, and Rai Murli Dhar of Umballa, who were invited for the purpose, addressed the assembly. Mr. Raza spoke at length for an hour and a half; he depicted the real state of India, explained the means to improve it; criticised the Muhammadan deputation and Free Trade policy. His speech was as stirring and effective as it was earnest. It removed the drowsiness of this sleepy-hollow and revived the patriotic feeling among the audience. The song of "Bande Matram" was sung by a party of Bengali youths. Printed copies of this song, (in Deva Nagri characters) and another pamphlet on Desi Sugar were distributed. As the meeting was much prolonged Rai Murli Dhar's speech was postponed for the next day.

On the 17th instant, the assembly numbered about 2,700 and therefore beyond our expectations, considering it was the eve of Dewali, a day of great festivities among the Hindus. Rai Murli Dhar gave his fluent and interesting speech for more than an hour, and then others followed. The Indian Manufacturing Company, the Vaish Trading Company, and the Single Manufacturing Company exhibited their manufactures, among which were slates, slate pencils, lead pencils, copying pencils, penholders, sealing-wax sticks, perfumes, &c., all manufactured here. Both the meetings were successful.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
21st October, 1906.

Foreign sugar.

41. The Rafiq Punch (Moradabad), of 21st October, says that the use of foreign sugar in Marwar has been interdicted under orders of the State, and cites the instance of a delinquent whom the panchayet compelled to pay the stipulated fine on pain of being boycotted.

CITIZEN,
22nd October, 1906.

A correspondent in the Citizen (Allahabad), of 22nd October, says that a remarkable meeting took place at Gopalji's temple at Benares on the 10th instant. The spacious courtyard, the long and wide galleries leading to the courtyard, the music hall over the inner gate, and the halls surrounding the Court were crowded before the announced time. The gallery, surrounding the spacious arena was occupied by ladies of leading families, who sat there under the shadow of the balustrade in front of the wide gallery platform. Many thousand persons went away disappointed for want of space. The proceedings began at 4-30 P. M. when the hall presented only a scene of heads and expectant faces, turned towards the platform, where mustered strong the most influential men, including the Hon'ble Munshi Madho Lal, Pandit Madan Mohan Malviya, Babu Moti Chand, the leading banker of Benares, Babu Krishna Chandra Chaudhri, the leader of the wealthy Vaishyas of Benares, Babu Kesho Das, Babu Parsotam Das, Seth Syam Das, Gujrati, Chaudhri Ram Prasad, Ram Gopal Das, Babu Brindaban Behari, Munshi Mathura Prasad, Munshi Ram Partab. The young head of the Vaishnava Sampradaya, Srijut Lal Babu Maharaj graced the gaddi. On the motion of the Hon'ble Madho Lal, seconded by Goshain Bhawani Puri, Rai Bahadur, Mahamahopadhya Pandit Sheo Kumar Shastri was voted to the chair. The first speaker was a learned old Pandit Dwarka Nath Dube, the disciple of Gaurji. He spoke with great effect against the use of impure sugar and ghi. He was followed by Pandit Balwant Rao who concluded his speech in these emphatic words: "The man who offers impure foreign sugar, greased ghi and foreign cloth containing tallow to the Brahmins, Gods, Pitris, is a great sinner who could never expect mukti. The present distress in India is due to the indifference of the Hindus to matters of this kind. What was done in the past was done unknowingly, what is to be done in future is to be done knowingly, and he advised all good Hindus to avoid the use of all these articles now. Kashi was the centre of Hinduism. The Pandits of Kashi were the leaders of Hinduism. He hoped their decision to-day would be followed all over the country." The next speaker was Ram Singh, an old gentleman, who read a short address, in which he pointed out, on the authority of published works, how foreign sugar was refined by the use of things that were an abomination to Hindus. After this spoke Babu Jagdeo Prasad Gaur. He hoped all Hindus would hereafter avoid impure sugar from religious considerations. Economic considerations also made it the duty of every Indian to avoid the use of foreign sugar, and to use sugar made in India, without the help of ingredients that are unacceptable to Hindus. In the course of his speech he said that similar meetings had been held in Muttra, Lucknow, Bareilly, Shahjahanpur. Then rose Malviji, and all were rapt attention to hear him. He advocated the formation of a committee, which was formed soon after. After he had spoken arose the President Mahamahopadhaya Sheo Kumar Shastri of world-wide fame for Sanskrit scholarship. He exhorted the audience in a brief, but effective speech to preserve their religion and not to become Mlekshas by dealing with, and using foreign sugar, which was prohibited by the Hindu religion A most influential Committee was then formed, including among its members the Hon'ble Munshi Madho Lal, Hon'ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malviya, Babu Moti Chand, Goshain Bhawani Puri, Babu Shyam Das, Babu Kesho Das, Babu Parsotam Das, Babu Krishna Chandra Chaudhri, Babu Champa Lal, Babu Nanda Mal, Ram Chandra Nayak Kali, and other leading men and headmen of different communities. The dealers in foreign sugar came and declared in writing that they would never import foreign sugar or greased ghi again. The committee, that was appointed would decide as to how the signboards were to be granted to confectioners who had promised to abstain from the use of foreign sugar. The meeting was convened by Babu Moti Chand, Munshi Madho Lal, Gosain Bhawani Puri, Babu Hari Das and a number of leading raises to whom the thanks of all India are due. It was organised by Pandit Babu Nandanji Vaidya, Pandit Sarju Prasad Dikshit, Pandit Babu Nandan Nathji, Dwarka Prasad Pande, Babu Nandan Mal, Babu Salig Ram. Many confectioners declared in writing that they would not use foreign sugar and greased ghi and a similar declaration was signed by all the leading men present, several adding to the declaration that they had not used these impure things before, and would not use them in the future.

KANUJ PUNCH,
23rd October, 1906.

The Kanauj Punch of the 23rd October, while referring to the recent mass meeting at Lucknow about the boycott of foreign sugar says, that it is very doubtful if the vows made, will last long.

ARYA MITRA,
24th October, 1906.

The editor of the Arya Mitra (Agra) says in its issue of the 24th October, that the sweetmeats prepared in Agra, for the diwali festival were all made from country sugar, and that a number of the supporters of the swadeshi movement were going about delivering lectures on the subject.

MOHINI,
23rd October, 1906.

The Mohini (Kanauj), of 23rd October, says that the confectioners of Kanauj likewise prepared their sweetmeats for the diwali festival from country sugar; and suggests the desirability of carrying the movement into villages, so as to bring about better results.

A correspondent says that foreign sugar has been boycotted from Amanpur in the Etah district, another correspondent reports similar success at Brahmawarta in the Cawnpore district.

ANAND KADAMBINI,
September, 1906.

The Anand Kadambini (Mirzapur) for September, says that foreign sugar is refined by means of bone-ash, flesh and the blood of cows and that at least one shop of swadeshi sugar should be opened in every locality. The editor regrets, that no action has so far been taken to boycott foreign sugar in Mirzapur, and suggests early action in the matter.

SWADESHI BANDHU, Otober, 1906.

The Swadeshi Bandhu for October while deprecating the use of foreign sugar, points out that the swadeshi movement will bring about results beneficial to the rulers and the ruled alike, and will add to the wealth of the country which is verging on insolvency.

OUDH AKHBAR,
27th October, 1906.

The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of 27th October, says that the sweetmeats for the Diwali festival in Lucknow were all prepared from country sugar this year; and even Muhammadans satisfied themselves as to the sugar used before purchasing them. The editor remarks that the agitation in favour of the swadeshi movement in various towns and cities in India is not a whit inferior to that in Bengal. Lala Kanhaya Lal of Lucknow has circulated notices announcing a Swadeshi meeting on the 28th of October. The meeting will be attended very largely and speeches will be delivered by some eminent speakers. The editor of the Oudh Punch will be in the chair.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
23rd October,
1906.

The Bengalis.

42. The Kanauj Punch of the 23rd October, feels extremely dissatisfied at the agitation of the Bengalis, and suggests that it is highly desirable that Government should change its policy towards this ungrateful community, though Mr. Morley has foreshadowed in his budget speech, that further favours are to be conferred on the Indians.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
25th October, 1906.

English and un-English.

43. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), says in its issue of the 25th October, that to a rightly constituted and properly cultured Englishman the standard of conduct is summed up in a single word—English. What is English is right and proper; what is un-English is morally wrong and unworthy. Consequently, no word of condemnation is severer than the word un-English. If an Englishman is accused of un-English conduct it is at once recognised as the strongest word of reproach that can be applied. We wonder if Englishmen themselves have carefully considered how far the conduct of Englishmen at home and abroad is English or un-English.

Looking at the English race as possessing certain characteristic qualities which distinguish it from other races in the world, it is to be expected that the same qualities will mark them whether in England or out of it. Above everything else the English are a nation of empire builders. Napoleon contemptuously said that the English were a nation of shopkeepers; this is perfectly true. But where Englishmen build shops, kingdoms and empires follow in the natural course of things. Behind the English shopkeeper's wares is the brain that schemes the building of empires. He then asked if the ways of Anglo-Indians are English? The complaints that we constantly find in the papers, of young officers abusing their authority, forgetting themselves and setting up as petty despots, are these in accordance with English ways. One officer assaults people if they do not salute him. Another insults them if they do not fold their umbrellas on seeing him. Are these English methods? Where and how do they acquire these notions? Look at the ways of the Anglo-Indian Press, its dirty tricks, its utter disregard of the truth, its vileness of motive and violence of language. Are they English?

There can be only one answer to this question. The majority of Englishmen in this country are English by race but their ways are un-English, and the Press that represents them is almost wholly un-English in all its methods.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
16th October, 1906.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

44. The Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Gorakhpur), of 16th October, says that the public feel that the partition of Bengal has infused a new spirit in the country, and that the necessity of co-operation between Hindus and Muhammadans is at present agitating the public mind. The editor points out that the Muhammadans have their own sectarian differences, and should patch them up before attempting a union with the Hindus. He also remarks that both communities are constantly charging one another with insincerity, and condemns the attitude of the Arya Akhbar which he thinks is calculated to widen the gulf between the two communities.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
24th October, 1906.

The editor of the Awaza-i-khalq (Benares), protests in its issue of 24th October, against the attitude of the Muhammadan Press against the Hindus and their agitation, and points out that the Hindus have never asked for anything for themselves as a distinct community from the rest of the Indians, and asks if the Muhammadans can expect that Government will ever confer favours on them exclusively, leaving Hindus out of consideration. He regrets to find that racial animosities are likely to effect the ruin of the two communities.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW,
September, 1906.

Indian volunteers in India.

45. A correspondent in the Hindustan Review (Allahabad) for September, says, that the wars between the Christian powers of the world go to prove that the possession of one common religion is not a safeguard against the disturbance of peace; and that it would be a mistake to attribute the success or failure of a nation to its religion, as has been aptly illustrated by the recent success of the Japanese, who profess various creeds, and with whom the true creed is the bond of allegiance, and not the bond of the sovereign's religion. The missionary theory therefore that peace and good-will in Asiatic countries will be commensurate with their Christian converts, falls to the ground. The spread of Christianity has brought material civilization in its train, but it has very little to do with spiritual civilization. Republicanism and socialism can be traced to it directly, and all civil wars, regicides and revolutions appear to be due to the traditions of Christian countries. The traditions of Hindus and Muhammadans on the other hand have been in favour of loyalty and faithfulness to their sovereign. The safest standard to follow therefore, would be that of blood heredity and environment. Such reflections frequently arise in the minds of Hindus and Muhammadans, when they do not find themselves enrolled as volunteers, and when a Native Christian, or a man possessing a skin showing partial European descent claims superiority over his Indian fellow subjects, by reason of his eligibility for volunteering. He then says that perhaps the same sort of ideas occurred to Mr. Thoburn, when he pointed out that "Christianity" and a skin showing at least partial European descent, are still indispensable for eligibility, notwithstanding indications of a broadening confidence in the loyalty of the most martial tribes and castes of India, and the absence in the Indian Volunteers Act 1869 as amended in 1889, of any provision, shutting out any class of loyal subjects from serving as volunteers." In conclusion he suggests that a free exchange of ideas between English statesmen and the non-official class of educated Indians, will tend to improve the existing relations between the rulers and the ruled.

AL BASHIR,
23rd October, 1906.

Pandit Jwala Prasad, District Magistrate of Etah.

46. Al Bashir (Etawah), of 23rd October, says that the Muhammadans of Etah who have suffered at the hands of Pandit Jwala Prasad, District Magistrate of Etah, are afraid of being suspected of complicity in exposing him, in case their specific grievances receive publication. The editor asks to be furnished with a comparative statement, showing the number of Hindus and Muhammadans who have suffered at the hands of Pandit Jwala Prasad, during his charge of the district, and regrets very much that Pandit Bisheshar Nath Kak was not suspended for his lax supervision.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
19th October, 1906.

The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 19th October, asks if Pandit Jwala Prasad's silence after the attack made on him by the editor of Al Bashir is to be taken to signify his admission of the charges laid at his door. The editor says that Pandit Jwala Prasad should change his ways, if his actions whether wilful or otherwise have injured Muhammadans, as such conduct on the part of educated Hindus cannot foster feelings of friendship between the two communities. He concludes with the remark that if the District Magistrate persists in this sort of conduct he (the editor) will feel obliged to publish certain communications received against him, which he has withheld hitherto on purpose.

Quack physicians and medicine vendors.

KANAUJ PUNCH, 23rd October, 1906.

47. The editor of the Kanauj Punch, of 23rd October, invites the serious attention of Government to the injurious results due to its inaction in the matter of quack physicians and vendors of patent medicines.

Murder by a European railway guard.

ARYA MITRA, 24th October, 1906.

48. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 24th October, asks if action will be taken against the European guard who has murdered a college student without any provocation at the Jullundar railway station.

The education of Sadhus.

OUDH AKHBAR, 27th October, 1906.

49. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 27th October, says that Mr. Tahal Ram Ganga Ram is giving practical effect to the scheme of training Sadhus in Dera Ismail Khan. The project has been a good long time under consideration, and it is hoped that this class of Indians will now be able to make themselves useful to the public maintaining them, by going about and preaching in the interests of the country.

V.—LEGISLATION.

Elections for the Provincial Council.

BHARAT JIWAN, 22nd October, 1906.

50. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of the 22nd October, supports the Indian People in suggesting the election of Babu Ganga Prasad Varma at the forthcoming elections for the Provincial Council, as practical workers are much needed at present.

Appealable sentences.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 23rd October, 1906.

51. The Nasim-i-Agra of 23rd October, suggests that appealable sentences are at times reversed, and it is desirable therefore that in cases where a prisoner cannot arrange to be let out on bail, the sentence should not run until the decision of the appeal.

Reforming the boy-offender.

ADVOCATE, 25th October, 1906.

52. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 25th October, while discussing the scheme in England for the reformation of juvenile offenders offers the following remarks regarding the orders of the Home Secretary :—

The reform of the juvenile offender was introduced in England, by the Mosley Education Commission, that went to study the educational systems of the United States. It originated in Massachussets some forty years ago. The parents of offenders and the witnesses alone are admitted into the Juvenile Court. Firmness without harshness, is the necessary attribute of the presiding justice, his function being to repress but not to destroy, and his object to stimulate, but not to let self-respect run riot. The children prior to their examination are kept in fair sized rooms above the court ; and the infants are placed in a separate nursery under proper charge, so that their little wants may be attended to.

The editor then points out that in India much does not seem to have been attempted, and the little that is on record, as accomplished, was not the result of a well considered scheme. He then refers to the resolution dated 3rd October, wherein the Bombay Government has made certain suggestions to magistrates, and points out the desirability of their having recourse to the provisions of the Whipping and the Reformatories Acts, and of avoiding the infliction of sentences of imprisonment. In conclusion he says that the public will anxiously watch the result of measures suggested by the Government of Bombay, and suggests that in the meantime other Provincial Governments should take the suggestions into their most favourable consideration and see what they can do in their sphere of influence.

VI.—RAILWAY.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
19th October, 1906.

The collision on the Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway.

53. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 19th October, says that the reticence of the Anglo-Indian papers about the collision on 24th September last, near Lal Kuan and Pilibhit was somewhat remarkable, and is due to the fact that the dead and injured were only natives, and suggests that prejudice blunts human sympathy.

RAHBAR,
21st October, 1906.

Collision of trains.

54. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 21st October, says that the loss to life and property caused by collisions of trains during 1905, shows that railway employés do not discharge their duties properly. The editor hopes that more attention will be bestowed in future to this matter, though it is a well-known fact that no value is attached to the lives of natives.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
19th October, 1906.

Catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

55. The Naiyar-i-Azam of 19th October, says that a number of honest and obliging coolies and shopkeepers supplying victuals and refreshments at the railway stations under the present system, should be retained on the line after the contracts have come to an end, that the Station Master, subject to the general control of the District Traffic Superintendent, should be placed in charge of the arrangements made at each station, and that he should not be allowed to employ them on his private work to the detriment of their duties towards the public.

RAHBAR,
21st October, 1906.

Madan Mohan, a contractor on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

56. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of 21st October, invites the attention of Government and of the Railway Board to the various charges of fraud brought against Madan Mohan, a contractor on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, and suggests the desirability of an examination in the light of his account books. The editor is of opinion that should he fail to produce his books criminal proceedings should be instituted. He insinuates that inaction on the part of the Railway authorities will afford room for surmises which may reflect on the Railway administration itself.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
25th October, 1906.

Provisions of food for Indian passengers in Railway trains.

57. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 25th October, says, that the food supplied at railway stations is of a very inferior quality, and that the prices are considerably above the market rate. The editor, while calling the attention of the Railway Board and of his contemporaries to the matter, refers to the dining cars for the convenience of European passengers in the mail trains of the East Indian Railway, points out that now that the Southern Mahratta Railway is trying as an experimental measure the running of dining cars for Indian passengers in its trains, it is high time that the East Indian Railway authorities should also move in the matter and attach a dining car to their fast express trains for the convenience of the Indian passengers.

HINDOSTHAN,
26th October, 1906.

Dining cars for Indians in railway trains.

58. The Hindosthan (Kalakankar), suggests in its issue of 26th October that the several railways should follow the example of the Southern Mahratta Railway and attach dining cars for Indians.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
20th October, 1906.

The Railway conference, Simla.

59. The editor of the Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Gorakhpur), says in its issue of the 20th October, that the interests of millions of illiterate tradesmen are suffering owing to the present form in which Railway risk notes are worded, and invites the attention of the editor of the Hindustani to the matter, as he has every facility of organizing meetings of respectable tradesmen and other gentlemen in Cawnpore and Lucknow with a view to secure the co-operation of the Cawnpore Trades Association in this behalf and to move the Railway authorities to modify the existing terms of its risk note.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
23rd October, 1906.

The strike on the East Indian Railway.

60. The Kanauj Punch of the 23rd October, says that the strike on the East Indian Railway has not only led to unhappy results for the Native employés, but has also created a new opening for the Eurasians. The editor says that it must however be admitted that the course adopted by the Railway authorities in the matter has caused considerable loss to the company.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 24th October, 1906.

Complaints about the Bareilly Junction Railway station.

61. A correspondent in the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) corroborates in its issue of the 24th instant the complaints made in its columns on 16th October, and relates his personal experience of the difficulties that the public are alleged to undergo in obtaining tickets by night trains at the Bareilly Junction Railway station.

HINDUSTAN REVIEW, September, 1906.

Hindu protestantism.

62. A correspondent in the Hindustan Review (Allahabad) for September, says that the existence of an active protestant movement, can be traced side by side with orthodoxy even in prehistoric times, and that the best thinkers of the Hindu world from the authors of the Upanishads to the Vaishnava saints of the middle ages, and from the Founder of Buddhism to Swami Dayanand, have belonged not to the orthodox but to the heterodox School. Beginning with the Vedas one finds, that to the Vedic bard Nature is divine, and he revels in her worship; but as population increased and society grew more complex, it was found impossible for every house-holder to learn hymns and perform all sacrifices unaided. As time went on, undue importance came to be attached to the symbols themselves, and thus the poetical nature worship of the primitive Aryans stiffened into a dry ritualistic creed, and formalism, and elaboration of sacrifices brought the priestly caste into existence. They were not allowed however to win this position of superiority for themselves unchallenged, and at a later stage, one comes across great Kshatrya teachers and thinkers like Janak, inculcating a panth eistic idea of the universe and its creation, since incorporated in the Upanishads; until the Brahmans, participating in these speculations, became in their turn, the teachers of the new-learning, and regained their former prestige. But as the simple nature worship of the primitive Aryans had stiffened into a dry ritualistic creed, so the doctrine of jnan, taught in the Upanishads, degenerated into a creed of tapas, austerity and penance; and gave rise to that note of pessimism, which has since formed the undercurrent of all Hindu thought, and is perceptible even in the subtle and lofty systems of Sankhya and Yoga philosophy. It is this wrong view of human life, this warring against the whole visible and sensible world, this stunting of the moral nature, this ignoring of the nobility of man, which is responsible, in no incomparable measure for the stunting of Indian civilization, and for placing the kingdom of religion in permanent and hopeless discord with the kingdoms of Nature, Reason and Beauty.

TAFRIH, 21st October, 1906.

Government religious buildings.

63. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 21st October, points out the desirability of Government building mosques and temples at the expense of the State in every large city, since it has sanctioned the erection of a church at its cost at Chakrata.

INDIAN PEOPLE 21st October, 1906.

The late Swami Ram Tirtha.

64. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 21st October, says that we are inexpressibly shocked to learn that Swami Ram Tirtha was accidentally drowned in the Ganges at Tehri while bathing on the 17th instant. The Swami was a very young man and it is matter for profound regret that a career so full of promise should have ended so early and so tragically. His original name was Tirath Ram. He was a Punjabi and an M. A. of the Punjab University. For some time he was a professor in the Foreman Christian College at Lahore. Then he renounced the world, travelled in Europe and America, and came back to India as a confirmed Yogi. Swami Ram Tirtha had considerable literary gifts and his writings, both in prose and verse, had an exalted religious and patriotic fervour. His high character, learning, piety and earnestness attracted many men to him in the Punjab and the United Provinces, and some of our best educated men were proud to call themselves his disciples. For some years the Swami avoided large cities and spent most of his time in the Himalayas in meditation and study. Sometimes he was visited by his devoted disciples, but he usually corresponded with them and his letters were remarkable productions. His influence was steadily growing and his messages were eagerly read by a growing circle of readers. It is a grave misfortune that he should have been cut off so young and in such a tragic manner.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th October, 1906.

The pardah system in India.

65. The editor of the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), says in its issue of the 24th October, that the attempt to do away with the pardah system is frought with danger, as evidenced by the action of Miss Badruddin Tyabji in marrying an Englishman while stopping in England.

MUFID-I-AM,
24th October, 1906.

The Caliphate and the Sultan of Turkey.

1. A correspondent in the Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of 24th October, says that the Sultan of Turkey is no more a Caliph than any other Muhammadan ruler, that the Muhammadans are not bound by their religion to do what is impossible, and are allowed to please themselves in temporal matters, that they are bound to obey the orders of their ruler by their religion, irrespective of his creed or colour, that the word Caliph only means a successor, and every king can be styled as such; that the title of Caliph was assumed by kings in days gone by only with the view of adding to their dignity, and the practice has been handed down to the present times, and that there is nothing in the Muhammadan religion to show that there must always be a religious leader in the world, whose orders should be binding on every Muhammadan.

AGRA AKHBAR,
28th October, 1906.

Egypt.

2. The Agra Akhbár of 28th October, publishes a dialogue between an Englishman and an Egyptian, wherein the Egyptian appeals to the Englishman's sense of justice, and points out that justice demands that Turkey should be looked upon as the rightful owner of Egypt.

BHARAT JIWAN,
29th October, 1906.

The Anglo-Russian loan to Persia.

3. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of 29th October, says that the differences between England and Russia have so far tended to protect the interests of Persia, but her future seems to be gloomy as the two powers have now combined for the purpose of advancing a loan to Persia.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th October, 1906.

The Indians and the Irishmen.

4. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 26th October, says that Englishmen are very reluctant in making concessions to the countries depending on them, and points out that they do not admit the fitness of Irishmen for Home Rule, in spite of the fact that they are in no way inferior to Englishmen, and can boast of having men like Lord Kitchener in their midst. The editor says that bearing this fact in mind the Indians should not expect self-government. He concludes with the remark that certain Irishmen only recently tore the British flag on board a steamer, but the Englishmen did not even pass a resolution against them, not to speak of punishing them for this outrage.

ADVOCATE,
28th October, 1906.

Australian policy.

5. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 28th October, says that the colonists are perhaps the greatest enemies of the Church of Christ. Christianity suffers in the estimation of the Indian public because of its being the religion of the rulers, and because of the attitude of Colonial Christians towards non-Christian Indians. The domineering spirit of the bureaucracy here, and hatred of colour of the colonists abroad, not unoften create disquiet in the more pious Christians, particularly missionaries who mean to preach the teachings of Christ. The Rev. H. Worral of Australia belongs to this class. Speaking at Bendigo, he spoke thus of the Australian's hatred of colour: "The white Australian policy is lunacy. It is an insult to Almighty God and to the Empire. No such colour distinctions should be made. If Jesus and St. Peter came to the Yarra the only place which would be found for them would be in prison. Yet Christ in his own day had said of the little Syrian child, 'of such is the Kingdom of Heaven.' Any country which puts up such barriers of colour will be cursed by God." Let the colonists beware, for divine wrath may take time to descend, but when it does, it works with lightning rapidity and like lightning itself.

INTIKHAB-I-MEERUT,
October, 1906.

Home Rule and the Indians.

6. The Intikhâb-i-Meerut for October, says that the Irishmen have by their strenuous efforts for Home Rule, succeeded in enlisting the sympathies of the Americans on their behalf, and exhorts the Indians to exert themselves with the same zeal as has been evinced by Irishmen.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
28th October, 1906.

The curse of India.

7. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 28th October, reproduces the following from the Edinburgh Magazine in its issue of the 28th of October:—Here, in this frightful country, are 296,000,000 people, of whom 130,000,000 live in a way unfit for beasts, in a way that would be unwholesome and intolerable for swine, burrowing in wretched mud huts, clad in strips of rag, fed upon meagre fragments barely enough to keep them alive, swarming in filth unutterable; except only for the dwellers in London's Whitechapel, the saddest, the most forlorn, the most hopeless of human creatures. It must have seemed strange to the Prince that the state of these (men) was carefully obscured from his attention.

These teeming hordes in cities and on the baking flatlands are swept perennially by terrible diseases, the products of the conditions in which they live. The epidemics thus generated and launched upon their way threaten much of the world of men outside these borders.

Every few years appalling famines afflict this India, and the world, horrified at the mortality figures, contributes of its charity to alleviate the scourge.

The Prince of Wales would have been grieved and shocked to learn that his Government, instead of trying to obliterate caste, sedulously upholds it as a cheap and effective bulwark of its own supremacy.

From the poorer elements among these people is wrung every year the heaviest proportionate taxation known on this earth. A system of land tenure and land taxation conceived by savages and formulated by homicidal maniacs, a system that throws the heaviest burden upon those least able to bear it, has been largely responsible for India's unparalleled famine record of 28,000,000 deaths in one hundred and fifty years.

At the very time of the Prince's visit some of these evils were apparent to any observation and as plainly demanding explanation—and cure. The plague was raging in many cities. Over a large part of the country he traversed little or no rain had fallen in more than a year. Hundreds of miles he rode through a parched, hideous desert, brown as sand, dry as Sahara, scratched with futile ploughing where nothing would grow, ineffably pathetic, the sad evidences of frustrated hopes and impending ruin, blazed at day after day by the implacable, unclouded sun. Here was beginning what promised to be the worst of all famines of black famine history.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
1st November, 1906

Mr. Bryan on the Indian Administration.

8. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 1st November, says that Mr. W. J. Bryan is a candidate for the Presidentship of the United States, and is one of the best known public men of America. He came to India last year as a tourist, and he wrote his impressions in a series of letters which have been widely quoted and commented upon.

* * * * * * * *

He points to the Home Charges and asks what nation could stand such a drain without impoverishment. To abuse Mr. Bryan is not to answer his criticism. If his facts are correct—and they cannot be disputed—his conclusions are irresistible.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
1st November, 1906.

Hindu loyalty.

9. The Indian People (Allahabad) of 1st November says that the conduct of the Anglo-Indian and Jingo journals and their supporters has already had the effect of alarming the Hindu population of these parts, as appears from a communication published in the Pioneer of the 25th instant over the signature of "A Hindu." The fact of the refusal of two successive Viceroys to receive the Congress resolutions from the hands of the President, coupled with the fact of the reception of the Muhammadan address by the present Viceroy from the hands of the members of the Muhammadan Deputation, has been taken hold of by many to imply that the Hindus are not looked upon with as much favour as the Muhammadans.

* * * * * * * * *

And this view has further been strengthened by the vapourings of irresponsible Anglo-Indian journalists and Jingo publicists.

* * * * * * * *

But there is no solid ground for this inference.

* * * * * * * *

Officials as a class are expected to know that Hindu loyalty passed through a severe test in these provinces during the dark days of the Sepoy War and stood the test manfully.

It would however do some good to the Jingo journalists here and in England if they would only spare a little of their time and study the chronicles of that eventful period as related by official chroniclers.

* * * * * * * *

True statesmanship lies in not allowing by any act or speech these ignorant people to entertain a wrong impression that a particular community is in the bad books of the State, and that anything done to their detriment will go either unpunished or lightly punished.

Once such a state of things is allowed to take hold of the minds of the ignorant masses there is a great risk to the peace of the community at large, and responsible heads of the administration cannot be too careful as to the choice of their expressions on public occasions and their treatment of any particular community under their charge.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 1st November, 1906.

The Proclamation Day.

10. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 1st November, says that the Proclamation Day will be celebrated at the spot on the Fort esplanade where the Great Proclamation of Her Gracious Majesty the late Queen Victoria of revered memory, was first read by Lord Canning, on Thursday the 1st November 1906, at 5 p. m. All are cordially invited to attend.

Proclamation Day.

11. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 1st November, says that we hear a great deal about Empire Day, Partition Day, and several other days, but we seldom or never hear of Proclamation Day, undoubtedly the most important day in the history of British rule in India.

* * * * * * * *

Lord Canning read out Queen Victoria's memorable Proclamation at Allahabad on November 1st 1858, at Kydganj. This important event was celebrated last year at Allahabad, at a public meeting held on the spot where the Proclamation was read out. The President was a gentleman, who as a boy was actually present while the Proclamation was actually read and who remembers the occurrences of that day perfectly. We are extremely gratified to find that the Proclamation Day is to be observed in the same manner to-day. A requisition, signed by a number of Hindu, Muhammadan and Parsi gentlemen, has been issued inviting the public to meet on the same spot as last year, and to re-affirm the resolutions that were then adopted. We think Proclamation Day might be made an all-India celebration with advantage both to the rulers and the ruled.

ZAMANA, September, 1906.

The Indian National Congress.

12. A correspondent in the Zamana (Cawnpore), for September, after discussing the constitution of the Indian National Congress at length, says that the district and provincial political associations, if started, will tend to weaken the Congress, which represents the interests of the country as a whole. He adduces cogent arguments to show that the Congress is beneficial to the interests of both the Hindus and Muhammadans, both from a religious and an administrative point of view, and points out that the co-operation of every community inhabiting India is essential to the wellbeing of the country, and concludes with exhorting the Indians to lay aside all racial differences and to make common cause in promoting the interests of India.

ADVOCATE, 28th October, 1906.

Mr. G. S. Khaparde on the Congress.

13. The Advocate (Lucknow), of 28th October, contains the following remarks from Mr. G. S. Khaparde on the Congress :— It might be urged, though it is not probable that it would be, that Mr. Morley has changed his mind since taking office. If so, would his sympathy be worth keeping? He has committed himself to an optimistic view of Indian economic questions, and, when challenged by Mr. Hyndman, has declined the contest, though the same was invited by a section of his own constituency. Mr. Morley's views, if they appear anywhere hereafter, would have to be of a piece with the pronouncement already made by him. The philosopher may acknowledge a mistake, but the head of an administration cannot and dare not for fear of the imaginary something called prestige. So one without much political insight may easily see which way facts on economic matters would be marshalled by Mr. Morley. The elder generation of Congress politicians should join hands with the younger, else in their anxiety to secure sympathy on one side, they would lose the whole case by their sympathetic friend admitting the claim.

The suggestions, which form the subject matter of my previous letter, may be summarized as follows, in an order not originally observed but now introduced for facility of discussion, taking up the less contested before those round which a more or less heated controversy rages :—

1. Reduced expenditure on the pandal, and the entertainment of delegates, with facilities to the latter for increased intercourse with each other by being lodged in one compound.

2. Reduced number of subjects to be brought up for discussion before the Congress.

3. Constitution for the Congress.

4. The nature of the subjects, whether they should relate exclusively to grievances necessitating petitions and prayers, or whether they should be about matters which people can settle for themselves, without seeking any aid from Government or sympathizers.

5. Mr. Lala Lajpat Rai to be the president of the next Congress.

* * * * * * * *

The fourth suggestion about the nature of the subjects to be brought before the Congress has naturally been much discussed both in the public press and private letters.

* * * * * * * *

Without any pretensions to exhaustiveness or finality the list of subjects may be set forth as follows :—

I. Education on lines laid down by the National Council of Education.

II. Swadeshi in the widest acceptation of the term and including boycott.

III. Promotion of trade unions and prevention of injustice and hardship to workmen at the hands of employers.

IV. Establishing panchayats and associations for the settlement of disputes.

V. Devising means, by communication with the various associations in the country or otherwise, to unify Hindus, Muhammadans and others in parts where such union does not already exist.

The fifth and last suggestion about electing Lala Lajpat Rai to preside over the ensuing session of the Congress, has excited a great deal of discussion. The honoured name of Mr. Tilak has been proposed by various constituencies in Bengal and other places. It is said that this alarmed certain gentlemen to the extent of inducing them to invoke the assistance of the veteran leader Mr. Dadabhoy Nowroji. A third section has put forward the name of Mr. Stead for the presidential chair, with what object it is not disclosed yet.

There are a number of Indian gentlemen highly qualified for the respected position of the president. So it appears undesirable to go to a foreigner. Mr. Stead would thus appear to be out of the question. The remaining candidates are all good and great. If Mr. Dadabhoy consents to preside, there is not a single person in the whole of India who would not willingly withdraw to make room for the great Parsee patriot. If, however, he does not come out for any reason to take the chair, no gentleman other than one of the two remaining will be allowed to have the dignity without a keen contest.

ADVOCATE,
28th October, 1906.

Mr. G. S. Khaparde on the Congress constitution.

14. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 28th October says, with reference to Mr. G. S. Khaparde's views on the Congress constitution :—That the time has come when the erection of the Congress pandal should be given up, and the honour of holding sessions of the Congress confined to such towns in the country, the citizens of which are patriotic enough to possess a decent permanent hall to accommodate say from 250 to 500 delegates and five hundred visitors.

In all such reforms that Mr. Khaparde proposes he has our sympathy, but we part company when he desires us to introduce revolutionary changes in the methods of our work. We do not agree with him, in thinking that the Congress has achieved little in the past. The very change in the Anglo-Indian opinion is commendable. The Congress from its birth has confined itself to matters political and questions administrative. We desire it to confine its efforts to this field of work alone. The swadeshi movement, being an economic one, should be kept aloof from the Congress. In running the swadeshi movement we have the active co-operation of men who do not or cannot take active interest in politics; we do not want to lose their sympathy in this matter. With the boycott movement the people here have little sympathy, and consider its preaching injurious to the interests of these provinces. The Congress as an imperial body concerns itself with questions about which all provinces in India are equally ready and agreed. The United Provinces are not ready to accept boycott as a creed of the Congress or of the swadeshi movement. And this, to a great extent, is true of the Punjab also. Hence we cannot allow this question to be discussed on the Congress platform. We have already suffered in the past, for the overzeal of friends in having the cow protection movement almost suppressed on suspicion of its being a political movement, and we do not desire that those who, without rousing any hatred against foreigners, desire to promote the industries of their country should adopt a policy which will not benefit the country. These provinces in this matter may be looked upon as backward, but it is better that the true state of things should be stated.

TAFRIH,
28th October, 1906.

Nawab Salim-ullah Khan of Dacca and Mr. Gokhale.

15. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 28th October, says that strictures passed by Nawab Salim-ullah Khan of Dacca in his two letters in the Englishman, charging Mr. Gokhale with causing disaffection are simply ridiculous and deserving of silent contempt. The editor says that the Nawab so far has been known only within the limited circle of his friends in Dacca, and is indulging in these and similar vagaries with a view to gain notoriety. He then points out that the remarks attributed to Mr. Gokhale, wherein he is said to have exhorted the Bengalis to agitate like the Boers and the Irishmen, would not amount to an offence even if Mr. Gokhale had made them.

AL-BASHIR,
30th October, 1906.

The Rohilkhand Gazette and its pro-Congress proclivities.

16. Al Bashir (Etawah), of 30th October, is gratified to notice a change in the hitherto pro-Congress tendency of the Rohilkhand Gazette, and suggests that the Muhammadan papers should advocate one policy just the same as Hindu organs do.

MUFID-I-AM,
1st November, 1906.

Muhammadans with Congress views.

17. The Mufid-i-Ám (Agra), of 1st November, after quoting certain passages from the Urdu-i-Mualla for September, says that Muhammadans holding the views expressed in the two articles entitled "The Resignation of Sir Fuller" and "The next session of the Congress," cannot be expected to guard their own interests, to claim for Muhammadans an equality of rights, and to be loyal and faithful to Government. The editor points out that the Muhammadans as a body are not prepared to join societies opposing the policy of Government openly, and that those who pursue such a course can never be expected to do any good to the country.

ANAND,
23rd October, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

18. The Anand (Lucknow) of 23rd October, says that the attack on the Indian National Congress and on the Hindu community in the address presented to His Excellency by the Muhammadan deputation were undesirable.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
23rd October, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

19. The Nawab Mohsin-ul-mulk says in the Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 23rd October, that the idea of the Muhammadan deputation originated from Haji Muhammad Ismail Khan raees of Dataoli, who wrote him a letter on the subject with reference to Mr. Morley's suggestion in the Budget speech, that His Excellency the Viceroy should appoint a committee to consider the question of expanding the India Council, and pointed out that so far the Muhammadans had no opportunities of selecting their representatives for the several legislative Councils in India. He received letters of a more or less similar nature from several other leading Muhammadans, pointing out the necessity for safeguarding Muhammadan political interests and of providing ample scope for the political aspirations of young Muhammadans. He then issued a circular letter to all leading Muhammadans, and Muhammadan associations in India, and the consensus of opinions obtained led eventually to the preparation of the address presented to the Viceroy by the Muhammadan deputation. The work of preparing the address was entrusted to Nawab Imdad-ul-mulk Maulvi Saiyid Husain Bilgirami of Hyderabad, who drafted it on the lines indicated in the replies already obtained from various provinces. The address was then discussed, revised and adopted at a general meeting held at Lucknow, at which representatives from various parts of India were present. He then points out that Nawab Saiyid Muhammad who happened to be at Simla had nothing whatever to do with the address until the 28th of September, when it was suggested by certain mutual friends that he would join the deputation willingly, and it was then that the address was shown to him and altered slightly at his suggestion. He had no opportunities of considering the address with His Highness Agha Khan, who arrived at Simla on 30th September, and there was not the remotest idea of asking him to lead the deputation as His Highness Agha Khan had already telegraphed his consent to do so, and to join the deputation straight at Simla. Certain of the members of the deputation could not go to Simla owing to some unavoidable reasons. Sardar Muhammad Yakub Khan, the minister of Khairpur, Sindh, who was present in Simla, Sardar Yar Muhammad Khan, the minister of Jaora, and His Highness the Nawab Sir Amir-uddin Ahmad Khan, though ardent supporters of this movement, could not join it publicly on political grounds. He then goes on to say that time will show at no distant date, that the hopes cherished by the Muhammadans and based on the reply of the Viceroy are well-founded, and that attempts to detract from the importance of the deputation are only the outcome of jealousy and self-interest on the part of certain selfish leaders blinded by racial prejudices.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th October, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

20. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 26th October, ridicules the idea that the Muhammadan Association will adopt different ways from the Indian National Congress for representing the needs of the Muhammadans. The editor suggests that the Muhammadans, if they take his advice, should ask with circumspection and indirectly for things that the Hindus demand in plain language.

OUDH AKHBAR,
29th October, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

21. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), says in its issue of 29th October, that the Muhammadans in the municipal boards and councils, whether nominated or elected, have done nothing to ameliorate the condition of their countrymen, that the Muhammadan deputation by itself cannot succeed in bringing about satisfactory results without the co-operation of the Hindus, and that they should not expect to get their rights and privileges from the British Government without agitating loyally and constitutionally. He concludes with the remark that times have progressed considerably, and it will not be possible to secure political and commercial rights and privileges unless they qualify themselves for the purpose.

INDIAN PUNCH,
30th October, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

22. The Indian Punch (Budaun), of the 30th October, says that the Press is unanimous in extolling Lord Minto for the tact displayed in his reply to the Muhammadan deputation and the manner in which he avoided everything that would injure the feelings of the Hindus or the Muhammadans. The editor then adverts to the comments offered by the Pioneer on the subject, and to its advice to Lord Minto suggesting that the step forward referred to in the Budget speech should be taken with extreme caution, so that all the communities inhabiting India should be able to profit thereby, and its caution that any haste in the matter will tend to so embolden the people that it will become impossible to keep them within proper bounds. He asks how the Pioneer comes to this conclusion, and says that, considering the power wielded by the British Government, it seems impossible that Government should not be able to control the Indian public.

AL BASHIR,
30th October, 1906.

The Hon'ble Nawab Saiyid Muhammad.

23. The editor of Al Bashir (Etawah), of 30th October, says that it was very natural for the Hon'ble Nawab Saiyid Muhammad to ask the delegates of the Muhammadan deputation to exclude from the address the clause referring to the election of Muhammadan representatives by Hindus, on the understanding that the former will affirm the views and advocate the interests of the latter, so as to secure their re-election, for his failure to protest against the clause would place him in an unpleasant situation as he is a staunch supporter of the Congress movement.

OUDH AKHBAR, 1st November, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

24. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 1st November, while referring to the warm discussion in the newspaper world regarding the Muhammadan deputation to the Viceroy, says that the moderation and suavity of the address has had a wholesome effect on the Viceroy in Council and the European public, and has elicited the approbation of the Anglo-Indian press. The editor however regrets that certain native newspapers have taken a contrary view, and regard the deputation as calculated not only to disturb the harmony, but also to widen the gulf between the Hindus and Muhammadans. They lay false and unfounded imputations at its door so as to lower it in the public estimation, and at the same time allege that the Muhammadans have their sympathy and preach union between the two communities.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 1st November, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

25. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of 1st November, says that the editor of the Rahbar (Moradabad) is not justified in asserting that the Muhammadans as a whole are not at one with the views expressed in the address presented by the Muhammadan deputation, merely because Nawab Saiyid Muhammad and certain others like him who depend on Hindus, for their election to the councils and the municipal boards, have held themselves aloof from the movement. The editor thinks that the Nawab dissociated himself evidently through interested motives, as he would fail to secure his re-election to the council in case he joined the Muhammadan deputation.

TOHFA-I HIND, 25th October, 1906.

The Muhammadan Political Association.

26. The editor of the Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor) says, in its issue of 25th October, that the very followers of Sir Saiyid Ahmad Khan, who was opposed to political agitation are now presenting addresses, and starting political associations with a view to secure the political rights and interests of Muhammadans, and expresses a hope that the proposed Muhammadan Association will lead to important beneficial results.

UNION GAZETTE, 21st October, 1906.

Al Akhlaq and the Muhammadans.

27. The editor of the Union Gazette (Bareilly) of 21st October, regrets to find the editor of the Al Akhlaq exhorting the Muhammadans to join the Congress, and feels shocked at the tone of some verses in that paper dealing with the departure of Sir Bampfylde Fuller, whose resignation was painful to the entire Muhammadan community.

EXPRESS, 25th October, 1906.

The Muhammadans and the Bengalis.

28. The editor of the Express (Lucknow) of 25th October, says that the Muhammadan deputation, while feeling that those Muhammadan gentlemen, who by reason of their financial, zamindari, or other influence upon the Hindus of their locality might be returned successfully and annually to any particular council, may not be competent or bold enough to represent the Muhammadan cause sufficiently, did not hint at any particular Muhammadan gentlemen, as the Bengalee insinuates, but it simply laid down a principle, which, when adopted, it is believed will promote the cause of the Indian Musalmans better, and therefore finds it essential in the interests of the entire Muhammadan population throughout the length and breadth of the country, that a prescribed number of representatives previously specified by the Government, should be elected by the people (the Muhammadans themselves), and not selected by the Government. And over this simple request the Bengalee racked its brains for four long successive nights and days, suddenly jumping to the conclusion that if the cause of Muhammadan education were further patronised by the Government, they would be just as much disaffected as the Bengali Hindus are, and would make common cause with them—this powerful Bengali race—and drive the British Government and the British nation back again to its island home, through the Bahr-i-Bengal. How well I can now realise the meaning of that old adage Hujjat-i-Bengal wa Hikmat-i-Chin. The Muhammadans well know that in point of religion, social institutions, and domestic economy, they have nothing in common with Hindus, who look upon the former as aliens, whereas in their connections with the Christian (whether white or black) the Muhammadans can live with them without the slightest prejudice to their religion or national traditions, incorporating themselves with the Christians, in all the highest as well as the lowest matters of life. A Muhammadan can preside over a British Court of Judicature as well as over a Christian kitchen. A Muhammadan knows full well that he can be, and is being, benefited in his temporal cause by the Christians more than the Hindus can ever think of doing. The Muhammadans, at least the majority of them, I can assure the Bengalee, do not seek for its fostering care, nor do they much care for the advice of this self-styled elder-brother. When Bengal, steeped in ignorance, had not even a language of its own to convey its thoughts and sentiments to the masses, the Muhammadans brought life and light amongst them, through the medium of Arabic and Persian educationalists, and were the guiding and the ruling element amongst the people for upwards of six centuries. The Bengalee's younger brother is not ignorant of the fact that intellectually and physically he is in no way inferior to his self-styled elder brother, on the contrary he knows and fully believes that he is superior to this usurper of his birthright in many respects. We are well aware of the tricks the Bengali is up to, and we do not want him to pose as an elder brother or patron to our community, nor do we want him to discuss the advisability or inadvisability of the appointment of a European gentleman ignorant of Arabic or Persian languages to the Principalship of the Calcutta Madrasa. The Madrasa is an exclusive institution, and reserved exclusively for the education of Muhammadan youths, and if such appointments as the Bengalee refers to were in any way detrimental to the cause of Muhammadan education, they themselves would have taken up the case long ago. I think, I, as the Secretary of a local Muhammadan Club, and one who is more or less intimate with the office-bearers and members of the other Muhammadan Anjumans and societies of Calcutta, am in a position to express my views on behalf of the public, and to state that Mr. Chapman's temporary appointment to the Madrasa as its Principal is neither a supersession to any other claimant nor a new departure. I can mention the names of nearly half a dozen gentlemen, two of them actually having been made permanent to the Madrasa, as being totally ignorant of Arabic and Persian. The Bengalee ought not to tread upon forbidden ground, and should be advised not to venture upon a subject of which it has no knowledge.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
24th October, 1906.

The Indian Army.

29. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad) of 24th October, expresses its regret at finding that the recent orders of the Minister for War about the grant of daily allowances extend to European soldiers only. The editor invites the attention of Lord Kitchener to the matter, and points out that the extreme poverty of the Indian soldier is deserving of his best consideration.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th October, 1906.

The Indian Princes' council.

30. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 26th October says, on the authority of the Manchester Guardian, that the India Office is thinking seriously of forming the India Princes' Council. The editor says that this is looked upon as the outcome of the recent interview between Mr. Morley and the Prince of Wales, and suggests that it was probably on this account that a large number of Indian raises visited Simla recently.

ANAND,
23rd October, 1906.

The prosecution of the Hind Swaráj.

31. Anand (Lucknow) of the 23rd October, says that the article in the Hind Swaráj, in respect of which prosecution was instituted is no doubt open to objection, and may well be said to be the work of a man devoid of intellect.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
24th October, 1906.

The prosecution of the Hind Swaráj.

32. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of 24th October, while remarking on the prosecution of the Hind Swaráj of Bombay, points out that agitation in India is coming to a crisis and will, it is feared, lead to dangerous results.

INTIKHAB-I-MEERUT.
October, 1906.

The editor of the Intikháb-i-Meerut characterizes the article in the Hind Swaráj, regarding which a prosecution has been instituted (and a conviction since obtained) as the ravings of a maniac, and points out that British rule is in every way calculated to promote the interests of India.

SANSAR MITRA,
30th October, 1906.

The Sansar Mitra (Allahabad) of 30th October, says that Government should have overlooked the offence of the Hind Swaráj, as Indians cannot do without representing their grievances to Government.

ANAND,
30th October, 1906.

The prosecution of the Panjabi (Lahore).

33. The Anand (Lucknow) of 30th October, warns editors generally to be very guarded in what they write and invites their attention in particular to the prosecution of the Panjabi under section 153, Indian Penal Code.

INDIAN PUNCH,
23rd October, 1906.

Mr. Stead's proposal to invite certain editors from England to India.

34. The editor of the Indian Punch (Budaun), of 23rd October, disapproves of Mr. Stead's proposal to invite a certain number of editors from England to India, and agrees with the editor of the Hindustani in thinking that it will be quite possible for them to injure Indian interests on going back to England, by drawing on their imagination, in expressing their views on Indian affairs. He also thinks that the sum of fifteen thousand rupees which will be spent on inviting these editors, could be spent with greater advantage, in sending one or more Indians to carry on the agitation in England by securing interest in Parliament.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th October, 1906.

Invitation of certain editors from England.

35. The editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), says in its issue of 26th October, that the editors invited from England cannot gain sufficient experience about Indian matters in the course of a month's stay in India, and points out that there is all the same the possibility of their coming to conclusions detrimental to the interests of the country. He also suggests that it appears somewhat unseemly, to secure the good-will of the guests, after entertaining them at the cost of the Indians, and that a far better course would have been to lay out the sum, on sending out two or more leading Indians to promote Indian interests in England.

MUSAFIR,
30th October, 1906.

The attitude of the Government of India towards the Native press.

36. The Musafir (Agra) of 30th October, regards the attitude of the Government of India as scandalous, and points out that the number of convictions against editors in India is considerable; that the prosecutions and convictions have increased ever since Indians have begun to ask for their rights and privileges, and concludes with the remark that such prosecutions tend only to raise the offenders in the public estimation, and to increase the circulation of their papers. The editor points out also the desirability of Government overlooking petty offences.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
27th October, 1906.

The visit of the Amir of Kabul.

37. The Nasim-i-Agra of 27th October, suggests the desirability of the Muhammadans of Agra presenting an address to the Amir, and of their holding an exhibition of arts and manufactures peculiar to Agra during his stay there. The editor points out that the Taj Bagh will be just the place for the exhibition, and that its success depends entirely on the attention bestowed on it by the local authorities.

AGRA AKHBAR,
28th October, 1906.

The visit of the Amir of Kabul to India.

38. The Agra Akhbár of 28th October, suggests, that the Commissioner should be able to arrange for stands for the raíses of the division, so as to obviate the indignity of their having to stand in the roads so as to see His Majesty and the various processions. The editor points out that the local Muhammadans should be allowed to present an address of welcome, and the Hindus, an address of thanksgiving for the rights and privileges that they enjoy equally with the Afghans in Kabul.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

JASUS,
21st October, 1906.

Jaipur.

39. The Jásus (Agra), of 21st October, says that Babu Kanti Chander has a gift for finding out merit, and has taken good care not to leave a sufficiently capable man to take a leading part in the administration of the State. The editor points out that the morals of the people of Jaipur are very low, and drink, adultery and corruption are having a very deteriorating effect on the State. He concludes with advising the Jaipur public to bring their grievances to the notice of Government, and to bear in mind that Balji and Babu Sansar Chander can do them no harm.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
30th October, 1906.

The pamphlet attributed to Ziya-ul-Haq (Rampur).

40. The Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad) of 30th October, says that the article in the Naiyar-i Azam (Moradabad) of 19th October, alleging that the pamphlet is the work of Munshi Abdul Ghafur, late Minister of Rampur, and his adherents, is not based on sound sense and logical grounds, and is calculated to prejudice the magistrate trying the case. The editor is of opinion that Ziya-ul-Haq's signature being on the pamphlet there is no reason to doubt his authorship.

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

CITIZEN,
29th October, 1906.

Application for prosecution of Mr. Gordon, Assistant Commissioner of Rawalpindi.

41. The Citizen (Allahabad), of 29th October, says that the following is the translation of a petition presented to the Deputy Commissioner, Rawalpindi, requesting permission under section 197, Criminal Procedure Code, to prosecute Mr. Gordon, Assistant Commissioner :—

"1. The complainant states as follows :—That complainant had a civil case against Kashmira Singh and Sarandoz pending in the Court of the accused which was fixed for hearing to-day (20th October 1906).

2. That as usual, complainant went to inform his counsel that the case was called, and returned to the Court-room after informing the counsel's agent. That this fact enraged the accused, who told complainant why he had gone to call his counsel, and ordered complainant to stand on a box (which was lying by a wall in the Court-room) with his face towards the wall. That the accused kept the complainant unlawfully and forcibly standing in that manner from 12-45 to 4-5 p. m., and did not allow him to move or to see in any other direction except the wall. The complainant could not conduct his case as his counsel came late. The accused kept complainant (intentionally, forcibly, and without any rhyme or reason) in wrongful confinement for more than three hours. That complainant is an old man, and is a sahukar, and a respectable landowner, is an assessor, and income-tax payer, and has suffered much injury and degradation by this unlawful act of the accused.

3. That the accused kept the complainant in torture so much so that complainant's legs are still aching. The complainant, therefore, prays that the accused be dealt with according to law, and that after enquiry he be punished under section 342, Indian Penal Code, or any other section which may be applicable to the facts of the case."

BHARAT JIWAN,
29th October, 1906.

Gambling in Benares.

42. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of 29th October, says that there are a number of common gaming-houses where gambling is going on in season and out of season, and it is highly desirable in the public interests that they should be broken up and convictions obtained against the offenders.

The editor also invites the attention of the local police to the large number of thefts that are occurring at present in the city.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
30th October, 1906.

The Muhammadans in the police force of Eastern Bengal.

43. The editor of the Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad), says in its issue of 30th October with reference to the last Annual Police Administration Report of Eastern Bengal, that it is very surprising, that the Muhammadans hold so few appointments in the police force, and are yet taking no steps to take a larger share of posts in the department. The editor hopes that they will now take proper steps do so.

SITARA-I-HIND,
20th October, 1906.

Slaughter of animals in Moradabad.

44. The Sitara-i-Hind (Moradabad) of 20th October, invites the attention of the district authorities to the malpractices of the veterinary assistants, and to the consequent trouble to local butchers, and points out that pregnant and diseased animals continue to be killed outside slaughter-houses.

ADVOCATE,
28th October, 1906.

Hackney carriages at Benares.

45. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow) of 28th October says, that the arrangements for hackney carriages in Benares are nothing short of a public scandal. The carriages are dirty, the horses are ill-fed and badly groomed, and the number of carriages is apparently insufficient. The drivers are very impertinent and the fares they demand are not those sanctioned by regulation.

ANAND,
30th October, 1906.

Use of adulterated ghi by confectioners.

46. The editor of the Anand (Lucknow) says in its issue of the 30th October, that confectioners are systematically using adulterated ghi of a very inferior quality, and are responsible to a large extent for the spread of diseases. He points out therefore that those placed in authority should take the necessary steps for the prevention of disease, and check the sale and use of adulterated ghi and other articles of food.

NAJM-I-BAZIGH,
24th October, 1906.

The effects of the partition of Bengal on Muhammadans.

47. The editor of the Najm-i-Bázigh (Moradabad), of 24th October, expresses his satisfaction at the attitude of the Muhammadans, who are now beginning to exert themselves for the protection of their rights, and says that this happy result is the outcome of the partition of Bengal. He exhorts them to continue the pro-partition agitation, and to be on their guard against the flattery and trickery of the Bengalis.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
28th October, 1906.

Who turned out Sir Bampfylde Fuller ?

48. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 28th October, says that it was University matter, it has been said, that drove the great man out of office. True, but who gave him the last push from the doorstep ? None other than the Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University, Mr. Justice Mukerji. That gentleman had nothing whatever to do with the agitation against the partition of Bengal. He would be the last person in the world to seek a quarrel with a Lieutenant-Governor or any high official. And yet his was the hand that forced Sir Bampfylde Fuller to resign.

* * * * * * * *

Therefore it is right to say that Mr. Justice Mukerji, though his modesty will not permit him to claim it, had the most direct share in making Sir Bampfylde Fuller resign, and has deserved well of his countrymen.

AL BASHIR,
30th October, 1906.

The partition of Bengal.

49. Al Bashir (Etawah), of 30th October, highly commends the action of the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal in celebrating the partition of Bengal, with rejoicing and approves of their action in submitting a memorial to the Secretary of State, informing him of the current of feeling in the province, lest the British public should be misled by the anti-partition party. The editor exhorts them to keep the Secretary of State duly informed of the real state of affairs, and to forestall the Bengalis in their endeavours to misrepresent matters by distorting them to suit their own interests.

OUDH AKHBAR,
31st October, 1906.

The partition of Bengal.

50. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 31st October, says with reference to the mass meetings held in Calcutta to commemorate the partition of Bengal, that the Hindu meetings were characterised by the presence of a large number of leading and educated Muhammadans, some of whom gladly accepted the honour of taking the chair, while those held by the Muhammadans were marked by the total absence of Hindu element.

NAJM-I-BAZIGH,
24th October, 1906.

The attitude of Eurasians towards Indians.

51. The editor of the Najm-i-Bázigh (Moradabad), of 24th October, expresses his extreme regret at the attitude of Eurasians towards natives, and says that the very fact that they are born and bred in India should induce them to make common cause with the Indians in promoting the interests of the country. They however look upon natives with feelings of disgust and lose their temper at the very sight of Indians, abuse them and are often ready to go so far as to strike them. The editor thinks that they do so perhaps in order to save themselves the stigma of having native blood in their veins. He also holds them responsible for the many atrocities committed on natives, amongst them outrages on Indian ladies while travelling in trains.

NAJM-I-BAZIGH,
16th October, 1906.

The new Lieutenant-Governor of Eastern Bengal and the Muhammadans.

52. The Najm-i-Bázigh (Moradabad), of 16th October, says that the new Lieutenant-Governor of Eastern Bengal has realised the necessity of following the policy of his predecessor for protecting the rights of the Muhammadans, as evidenced by his remarks in his review on the Police Administration Report of that province. His Honour thinks that, regard being had to the very large proportion of the Muhammadan population in the province, the enlistment of 148 recruits only, in the police force out of a total number of 804 is not just and proper, and expresses a hope that efforts will be made to make up the deficiency in a few years' time.

ZUL QARNAIN,
28th October, 1906.

Friendly relations between Europeans and Indians.

53. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of 28th October, says that Western education has brought about a great revolution, and has led educated Indians to adopt Western tastes, manners and etiquette, which promote free intercourse between Indians and Europeans in every walk of life and at social gatherings and sports and pastimes. The editor then refers to the ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of the Saadat pavilion in Budaun on the 22nd instant when this friendly intercourse was pre-eminent, and says that it is calculated to strengthen British rule in India.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th October, 1906.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

54. The editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam says in its issue of 26th October, that the Muhammadans are like a wrestler, who will brag of his prowess, so long as he knows that there is no likelihood of his valour being put to test, and will make a very humble estimate of himself as soon as he feels that he has a powerful opponent ready to compete with him. He then patron out that the patron will naturally turn to the wrestler who is not afraid of competition, and concludes with exhorting the Muhammadans to be prepared for competition and not to confess their inefficiency without a fair trial of strength.

OUDH AKHBAR,
30th October, 1906.

Union between Hindus and Muhammadans.

55. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 30th October, says that Mr. Ghaznavi, one of the speakers at the celebration of the partition of Bengal, pointed out that the salvation of India lies in the union between Hindus and Muhammadans. It is a remarkable feature of the meetings held on 16th October, that the Muhammadans of Bengal evinced a deep interest in the meetings organized by the Hindus. This discredits the theory set up by the Anglo-Indian Press, which attempted to make out that the diversity of Hindu and Muhammadan interests renders the co-operation of the two communities impracticable. So does the Muhammadan deputation. His Highness Agha Khan, who led the Muhammadan deputation, has said that he has disfavoured the partition from the very beginning and holds the same views still. The Honb'le Nawab Saiyid Muhammad is likewise opposed to the partition, and the proceedings of the 16th of October leave no doubt that the educated Muhammadans are unanimous in condemning it. The attempt made by Nawab Salim-ullah Khan of Dacca, to organize pro-partition meetings and to set himself as the leader of the entire Muhammadan community in Bengal has proved a miserable failure, and the devices adopted by him to induce the famine-stricken Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal to join the pro-partition meetings were far from honourable. Taking the Nawab at his word the Muhammadans at these meetings did not exceed twenty thousand men. It is noteworthy that a large section of the family of the Nawab of Dacca (in all seventeen) attended the anti-partition meeting of the Hindus, and one of them was in the chair. The editor says that the events of the day have proved satisfactorily that the Indians as a whole (leaving the Nawab of Dacca and his adherents aside) are unanimous in regarding the partition of Bengal with disfavour and in evincing genuine sympathy with the Bengalis, and expresses a hope that Government will not be misled by the selfish misrepresentations of the Nawab of Dacca.

ANAND,
30th October, 1906.

Disunion between Hindus and Muhammadans

56 The Anand (Lucknow) of 30th October, condemns the Muhammadan Press for widening the gulf between Hindus and Muhammadans, makes specific mention of the attack of the Nawab of Dacca on Mr. Gokhale, and of Al Bashir on Pandit Jwala Prasad Sankhadhar, and concludes with the remark that the British Government can take proper care of its own interests, and the Muhammadans need not worry themselves in the matter.

The Partition-day of Bengal.

OUDH AKHBAR,
30th October, 1906.

57. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of 30th October says, that Babu Hira Lal of Dehra Dun has designated the partition-day of Bengal as the Union-day of India, and exhorts every Indian to use swadeshi articles, to practise self-denial when an article of swadeshi manufacture is not available, to endeavour to secure the rights and privileges promised in the Proclamation of 1858, and to love Indians as such, irrespective of all distinctions of creed.

The views of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji on foreign piece-goods.

NAJM-I-BAZIGH,
24th October, 1906.

58. The Najm-i-Bázigh (Moradabad), of 24th October, while referring to the appeal of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji to the Indians, to boycott foreign piece-goods on the ground that the fat of cows and swine is used in sizing them, apprehends that such insinuations might lead to mutiny as was the case in 1857, and suggests the advisability of Government giving the matter its best consideration.

Anti-swadeshi meetings in Agra.

MUFID-I-AM,
24th October, 1906.

59. The editor of the Mufid-i-Am (Agra), in its issue of 24th October announced with gratification that a number of meetings were held, and speeches delivered by Muhammadan preachers, with a view to exhort all Muhammadans who have the welfare of India at heart, and to desist from opposing the British Government, whose just and benign rule has conferred religious and political freedom on the country. The speakers impressed on the audience the necessity for the union of all classes of Muhammadans, and exhorted them to merge all sectarian differences for the good of the country.

The effect of the swadeshi movement on temperance.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
24th October, 1906.

60. The Mukhbir-i-Álam (Moradabad) of 24th October, feels extremely gratified at the wholesome result produced by the swadeshi movement in bringing a large number of temperance societies into existence, and inducing abstinence from liquor. The editor views with satisfaction the change in the bhishtis of Ahmedabad and the chamars of these provinces in favour of temperance, and expresses a hope that the progress of the swadeshi movement which has been slow so far, will be more encouraging in future.

Swadeshi improvement.

TAFRIH,
28th October, 1906.

61. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 28th October, says that the movement will progress by leaps and bounds if priests and pandas on the one hand, and their clients on the other insist on getting each other to use swadeshi articles on pain of being boycotted in case of delinquency. The editor suggests that foreign sugar will disappear from the market in no time, if Brahmans attending feasts and invitations insist on the use of country sugar, and that foreign piece-goods likewise will receive a severe shock if the parties to marriage ceremonies refuse to receive such articles of clothing as are of foreign manufacture.

Swadeshi club at Agra.

TAFRIH,
28th October, 1906.

62. The Tafrih (Lucknow) of 28th October says, that the students of Agra have started a swadeshi club, with the view of inculcating swadeshi principles, and promoting the interests of the movement.

Swadeshi meeting at Basti.

ADVOCATE,
28th October, 1906.

63. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of 28th October, says that a largely crowded meeting was held in the Raja's palace at Basti; nearly 800 persons were present. Raja Pateshwari Pratap Narain Singh was unanimously voted to the chair. Babu Nageshwar Bakhsh Singh of Marawalia, a worthy zamindar of the district, explained in a brief and lucid manner the mode of preparation of vilaiti sugar, and requested the public to abstain from using the above from a religious point of view. Several other pleaders followed him and it was unanimously resolved that it should be used no more, and all the sugar in stock should be either disposed of or exported to somewhere, also the sweetmeat prepared of vilaiti sugar to be bought and destroyed. The market there is reported to be free from vilaiti sugar.

Swadeshism in Meerut.

BHARAT JIWAN,
29th October, 1906.

64. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of 29th October, notes with great satisfaction that a swadeshi meeting was held at Pandit Ganga Ram's Dharamsala in Meerut on 16th and 17th October. The audience numbered about two and a half thousand, and such of them as deal in indigenous products produced their merchandise for public inspection.

BHARAT JIWAN,
29th October, 1906.

Swadeshism in Ireland.

65. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of 29th October, exhorts the Indians to follow the example of Irishmen, in promoting the swadeshi movement, and to do all in their power to boycott articles of foreign manufacture.

OUDH PUNCH,
1st November, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

66. The Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of 1st November, says that a meeting was held on 11th October last at the house of Mr. A. P. Sen, barrister-at-law, at Kaiser Bagh (Lucknow). Mr. Sinha was in the chair. The first speaker, Mr. Mitra, of the Calcutta Bar, exhorted the audience to pay particular attention to physical culture which has not been sufficiently attended to so far. He pointed out that the British Government dispenses justice, and looks after our requirements, as far as policy permits, and that the Indians therefore, should exert themselves to secure their own ends without despairing as the Russo-Japanese war sufficiently proves that the barbarous nations of the East can assuredly rise to eminence.

Babu Banarsi Das then addressed the meeting and pointed out the necessity for boycotting foreign articles, appealed to the Indians to merge all racial differences, and to co-operate in the interests of the country, and condemned the attitude of those newspapers whose policy tends to widen the gulf between Hindus and Muhammadans. The last speaker, a Panjabi, advocated agitation and urged that the greatness and importance of the Afghans and the Japanese was due mainly to their spirited resistance to what did not suit their interests. The proceedings began with the recitation of the national song of Band matram, and closed with the recitation of certain verses adjuring the audience to give up the use of foreign articles.

BHARAT SWADESHI PRAVARTAK,
October, 1906.

Foreign sugar.

67. The Bharat Swadeshi Pravartak (Farrukhabad) for October, describes the process of refining sugar as revolting, and mentions saliva and dead flesh amongst the articles employed in its refinement. The editor says, that such things are calculated not only to destroy religion, but to induce disease also, and suggests the need for boycotting foreign sugar.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
23rd October, 1906.

Foreign sugar.

68. The Cawnpore Gazette of 23rd October, says that foreign sugar has been boycotted from Jodhpur under formal orders issued from the darbar, and panchayets have been organized to levy fines from confectioners and others dealing in foreign sugar.

HINDUSTANI,
31st October, 1906.

Foreign sugar.

69. The Hindustani (Lucknow) of 31st October, says that meetings were held at Khairabad in the Sitapur district and at Lucknow, in which the Hindus and Muhammadans have resolved to refrain from using foreign sugar and clothes, and that a company has been started at Khairabad for the sale of swadeshi sugar.

OUDH AKHBAR,
31st October, 1906.

Swadeshi sugar.

70. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 31st October, expresses its great satisfaction at finding that the Indians are beginning to realize the evil effects resulting from the use of foreign sugar, and exhorts them to use country sugar as being sweeter than foreign sugar and free from all impurities. The editor says that Western education has infused fresh life amongst Indians, as evidenced by the inauguration of the swadeshi movement, which is calculated to conduce to the happiness and prosperity of the country. He further states that foreign sugar is mostly imported into India from China and America, that Government does not force its use upon the Indians, and that it is their own fault if they use foreign products. He concludes with the remark that so long as the Indians remain firm to their religion they need not apprehend Government interference.

SITARA-I-HIND,
20th October, 1906.

Alleged boycott by the Ahirs of Mirzapur.

71. The Sitara-i-Hind (Moradabad), of 20th October, says that the Ahirs of Mirzapur have resolved not to sell milk to Europeans ever since an Irishman shot a cow dead some time back.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th October, 1906.

Boycott.

72. The editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), after referring in its issue of 26th October to the boycott of American goods by the Chinese, says that men who cannot stick to the policy they announce, and have no sense of patriotism in them are worse than the brute creation.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
1st November, 1906.

Boycott.

73. A correspondent in Kanauj Punch of the 1st November, says that His Excellency the Governor of Madras has, while laying the foundation-stone of the Agricultural Research Institute, pointed out that the swadeshi movement has his sympathy inasmuch as it tends to improve indigenous products, but that he does not approve of the idea of boycotting articles of foreign manufacture. The editor is of opinion that the improvement of indigenous products is not possible without the purchase of foreign commodities.

INDIAN PUNCH,
23rd October, 1906.

The tyranny of Anglo-Indian officers.

74. The Indian Punch (Budaun), of 23rd October, publishes a dialogue between an Indian and an Anglo-Indian officer, wherein the Indian is asked why he should not be hanged, transported, sent to jail and whipped for having brought a charge of murder against an Englishman. He is told distinctly that one Englishman is not going to hang another at the instance of a black native who may himself murder a son or a brother. The Indian then points out, that Indian officers do punish Indians in the interests of British justice, that they assess taxes, get latrines built in front of houses, and are ready to fight with and to secure convictions against their countrymen, solely with the view of upholding British justice. He is in reply told that the Indians are fools, and is eventually turned out for talking nonsense. He then implores Divine vengenace for this gross injustice. The editor remarks that Government will do justice if the matter is brought to its notice, and that this behaviour of Anglo-Indians will not help them on the day of Judgment.

TAFRIH,
28th October, 1906.

Unfounded charges on Anglo-Indian officers.

75. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 28th October, says that certain newspapers are causing considerable harm to the country by attributing to Anglo-Indian officers wholesale charges of antagonism to the swadeshi movement. The editor says that such officers are to be found only in very limited numbers, and are not met with beyond a limited area in Bengal. On the other hand they countenance the swadeshi movement and do everything in their power to encourage indigenous products. The tone of the Government Resolutions on the subject likewise indicates similar views on the part of the rulers. It is highly desirable therefore to disabuse the public mind of the misapprehension under which they are labouring.

ADVOCATE,
28th October, 1906.

Mr. Molony, the Collector of Gorakhpur.

76. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of 28th October, says that happy is Gorakhpur, notwithstanding its flood and scarcity, for it happens to have in its hour of trouble a tactful Collector, who possesses genuine sympathy with the people. His efforts to alleviate and if possible to prevent the sufferings of the poor are highly appreciated, and people fully realize that they have a Collector who really feels for them. And Mr. Molony is not one of those ma-bap sort of Civilians who treat the ignorant people with kindness but cannot put up with an English-knowing native. It is believed that Mr. Molony is in sympathy with the aims and aspirations of educated Indians. This belief has won for him popularity with the educated classes. It is really Europeans of Mr. Molony's stamp to whose tactful and sympathetic labours the British Government owes so much of its success in this country.

HINDUSTANI,
31st October, 1906.

Pandit Jwala Prasad, District Magistrate, Etah.

77. The Hindustani (Lucknow) of 31st October, says that a Muhammadan correspondent from Etah writes that the attack on Pandit Jwala Prasad is due to his having convicted a Muhammadan Jailor on a charge of embezzlement of Government money. The editor says that those who know Pandit Jwala Prasad personally can very well understand that the charges laid at his door are wholly unfounded. He concludes with remarking that such attacks on the part of Muhammadan papers tend only to widen the gulf between Hindus and Muhammadans.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE.
23rd October, 1906.

Bribery.

78. The Cawnpore Gazette of 23rd October, says that corruption seems to prevail in all departments in the Government Service, and the worst of it is that Government is cognizant of the manner in which gratuitous payments are exacted from the public. The editor makes particular mention of process-servers, patwaris, siyaha navises, wasilbaqi navises, the court clerks and readers, the police and the Public Works Department.

ANAND.
30th October, 1906.

Indian Officers in Ludhiana.

79. The Anand (Lucknow) of 30th October, says, with reference to an address presented by the Muhammadans of Ludhiana memorializing Sir Charles Rivaz to protect them from Indian officialdom, that the Muhammadans have been actuated in the matter, because the district authorities and other principal officers in Ludhiana at present are Hindus. The editor points out that this memorial is the work of certain fanatical Muhammadans, led by the proprietor of the Observer, and hopes that His Honour is sufficiently acquainted with the popularity of Diwan Tek Chand, the present Deputy Commissioner of Ludhiana, and that his detractors will be disappointed in their sinister designs.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE.
1st November, 1906.

The poverty of India.

80. The editor of the Rohilkhand Gazette, says in its issue of 1st November that the bare fact that thirty crores of rupees are passing annually into Great Britain is quite enough to prove the poverty of India beyond doubt, and concludes with the remark that those who can make political forecasts can assert with certainty, that an amelioration in the condition of India is an impossibility.

JASUS,
21st October, 1906.

Press conference.

81. The Jásus (Agra), of 21st October, invites the attention of its contemporaries to the formation of a press conference at an early date, so as to safeguard and promote the interests of the Indian Press. The editor points out that his efforts have been successful, in so far that the proprietors of the several papers in Moradabad have organized a committee of their own, and suggests that similar action should be taken in Agra and other important cities as soon as possible.

AL BASHIR,
30th October, 1906.

Al Bashir on the publication of an Urdu newspaper in Eastern Bengal.

82. The editor of Al Bashir (Etawah), of 30th October, is highly gratified to hear of the publication of a monthly Urdu journal called Al Mashriq, from Eastern Bengal, and suggests that it should be made a weekly paper, as experience shows that monthly periodicals die an early death. He points out that Urdu should be given every encouragement in the province, and that the newspapers of Upper India should receive a wider circulation in order to facilitate the interchange of thought between the Muhammadans of both provinces.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
1st November, 1906.

The intemperate language of the Bengali Press.

83. The editor of the Rohilkhand Gazette says in its issue of the 1st November, that the Government is only actuated by policy in allowing the Bengalis to give full vent to their feelings, which can do it no harm. They are thus exhausting their force and spirit which could much better be utilized otherwise, and are indirectly strengthening the hands of Government. He concludes with the remark that it is a mistake to think that the silence of Government is due to its being afraid of the Bengalis, and it is not that Government is allowing them to indulge in their license with a view to tighten the noose round their necks.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
23rd October, 1906.

Equality of rights.

84. The Cawnpore Gazette of 23rd October, says that the rulers and the ruled should have equal rights and privileges as British subjects, and that preferment should go by merit, as every one seems to desire.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
23rd October, 1906.

The Diwali festival in Cawnpore.

85. The Cawnpore Gazette of 23rd October says, that gambling in Cawnpore was carried on during the Diwali festival on a much larger scale than elsewhere, and has reduced a large number of men to penury. The editor points out that gambling often-times leads to the commission of other offences.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
24th October, 1906.

Muhammadan Government servants in Madras.

86. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of 24th October, quotes facts and figures showing that very few lucrative and onerous offices in the judicial branch of the service are held by Muhammadans in Madras. The editor invites the attention of the Government of Madras to the matter, and expresses a hope that a sufficiently large number of Muhammadans will be forthcoming to compete for higher appointments, if invited to take a fair share in the service of the presidency.

NAJM-I-BAZIGH,
24th October, 1906.

Indecent assaults on Indian females by Europeans and Eurasians.

87. The editor of the Najm-i-Bázigh (Moradabad), of 24th October, while referring to the prosecution of one Mr. Ward, a railway guard on the Southern-Mahratta Railway on a charge of rape on a native girl of nine years of age, expresses its extreme regret at the enormous increase of dastardly attacks by Europeans and Eurasians on Indian ladies, and attributes the increase to racial prejudice which influences courts into passing very light sentences, merely because the culprits happen to belong to their community. The editor opines that an exemplary sentence should be passed on the offender in this case so as to have a deterrent effect on others. In conclusion, he invites the serious attention of Government in this direction, and says that unless strict measures are adopted to stop the recurrence of similar cases, dangerous consequences might ensue, as Indians do not hold any thing so dear as the honour of their females.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
24th October, 1906

Segregation of first offenders from habituals.

88. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of 24th October, takes exception to the practice of professional criminals and short term prisoners living together in jails, as this is calculated to turn first offenders into hardened villains. The editor, after referring to the release of some eight hundred short term prisoners from the Punjab jails in 1905, after an inquiry into the circumstances leading to their conviction, says that this leaves no doubt that many innocent persons are sent to jail on technical grounds or through interested motives as well as owing to a failure to exercise proper discretion on the part of magistrates dispensing justice. He suggests that workshops should be built for first offenders in each jail somewhat on the same lines on which reformatories have been instituted for juvenile offenders.

ADVOCATE,
28th October, 1906.

The insolvency of Messrs. Arbuthnot and Company.

89. The editor of the Advocate (Lucknow), says in its issue of 28th October, that the firm is an old one and had been known to be as stable as the British Government.

* * * * * * * *

We cannot accept the allegation that the collapse has been sudden. The proprietors must have known that they had been managing a losing concern, but they did nothing to warn the depositors. Of course Sir Arbuthnot is safe with his knighthood, but his failure is full of lessons, and Indians and domiciled Europeans will in future take care to deposit their savings with banks having their working capital in India.

ADVOCATE,
28th October, 1906.

Food contamination in shops.

90. The Advocate (Lucknow) of 28th October, says that the halwais and cooked meat sellers have at their disposal the life and health of the majority of our office-going adults and school-going children, in that they supply the lunch for both classes. The sweetmeats and meat are arranged or exposed in trays and vessels, as the case may be, and invite flies to a very wholesome repast that come laden with all the bacteria that produce diseases of various kinds.

* * * * * * *

In melas and fairs, diarrhœa and cholera do not unoften break out in an epidemic form which is not mainly due to human congestion and exposure; the dust-laden and fly eaten sweetmeats, puris and halwa have not a little part to play in the germination of diseases. To the sources of contamination noted above must be added the soot from the open and unprotected kerosine lamps in which complete combustion is a very, very far-off dream. How playfully does the light from lamps shoot forth in different directions as the wind listeth and not very uniformly lays the layers of black particles on sweetmeats, placed far and near? The articles being freely exposed to the air, are liable to contamination (1) by the highly polluted dust arising from the streets during high wind, (2) by dust arising from the kutcha floor of shops, (3) by flies, and (4) frequently by contact with the dirty hands of customers, some perhaps from houses infected by dangerous diseases. Such contamination of food cannot but be a fruitful source of disease. From observations and enquiries, it appears that the prices of the common sweetmeats are actually or practically the same in the petty shops; so that the possible cost of providing protection of sweets from contamination is not likely to materially press too heavily either on the dealers or the consumers. It is expected the corporation will not be long in formulating wholesome instructions to sweetmeat sellers and taking care to see them followed.

* * * * * * * *

Cholera and dysentery do more havoc in Northern India than elsewhere. If we are not mistaken, the municipal boards have power to see that putrified meat or fish, contaminated sweets and adulterated ghi are not offered for sale in the shops. If they have, the law is a dead letter on this point. It behoves our health officers, if they have the power, to exercise it to the guarantee of fresh and wholesome sweets to the towns people. If the law is silent on this point – it cannot expressly enjoin a laissez fare policy on such a vital point—the Legislature should be moved to give municipal boards the necessary authority to take care that good and uncontaminated sweets are offered for sale to the public. What is however possible to one and all, is to see that such detestable things are not brought in the house or school and taken by anybody. Here is a field for the extensive practice of the right of self-government which it does not rest with the Government to grant or to refuse.

HINDOSTHAN,
30th October, 1906.

Trade.

91. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of 30th October, says that trade begets wealth, as evidenced by the ever-increasing prosperity of Western nations, and exhorts Indians to devote themselves heart and soul to the promotion of swadeshi interests which will undoubtedly ameliorate the condition of India.

OUDH AKHBAR,
31st October, 1906.

Leather factories in Cawnpore.

92. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 31st October, says that a reduction in the freight of leather exported to Europe and America has brought business in two leather factories at Cawnpore to a stand-still, and that this has become a source of much concern amongst dealers in leather, who intend inviting the attention of the Railway authorities to the matter. The editor is of opinion that this embarassment can be removed only by imposing restraints on the export of leather from India.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
1st November, 1906.

Agra.

93. A correspondent in the Indian People (Allahabad), of 1st November, says that on Sunday, the 21st October, Professor Sudhir Chandra Bannerjee, M.A. of Calcutta addressed a public meeting at Swadeshi Bazar. There was a large gathering of about 1,200 persons and much enthusiasm prevailed.

* * * * * * * * *

He compared the condition of the India of to-day, when poverty and discontent are prevailing all round, with the India under Moghuls and other rulers. He spoke at length upon the ill-treatment which the Indians receive at the hands of the Europeans in India, the disgraceful policy which the various Colonial Governments have adopted towards the poor Indians, and the equally disgraceful policy of silence and non-interference adopted by the British Parliament. After speaking for more than an hour he suggested the remedy, which he said lay in self-consciousness and self-exertion. The Indians, he said, ought to know everything about themselves and their country. They ought to know what they were, what they are, what they intend to be, what they will be and what they can be and so on. Having done that they ought to exert themselves.

OUDH AKHBAR,
1st November, 1906.

Quarantine rules.

94. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of 1st November, expresses its surprise at learning that the Government of Turkey contemplates to impose further restrictions and taxes on the pilgrims to Hedjaz, owing to the abolition of quarantine rules at Bombay. The editor expresses a hope that any terms calculated to inconvenience the pilgrims will not be acceptable to the Government of India.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
1st November, 1906.

Touting for pilgrims.

95. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 1st November, says that some very objectionable methods are employed by some of the local Pragwals for touting for pilgrims, and it is necessary in the interest of the public that these methods should be stopped. Both the public of Allahabad and the authorities should pay attention to this crying evil and take prompt measures to remove it. Some of the Pragwals subsidise such ekka and carriage drivers, as have license to ply for hire inside the Railway compound. The unwary pilgrim is lured to these conveyances by the drivers who are secretly in the employ of some Pragwals, and is taken without his knowledge or consent to the house of the said Pragwal and there he is kept under a sort of surveillance, till he bathes at the Tirbeni and performs all the necessary religious ceremonies. At the time of starting for home the pilgrim to his chagrin finds himself surrounded by half-a-dozen or more men armed with lathis, who profess to be the retainers of the Pragwal, to whose house the innocent stranger was lured, and now he is forced by threats and show of force to pay against his will any amount named by the Pragwal as Daksina for the final blessing or suphal. People in this way have to submit to an extortion, which they have neither time nor money to expose or to take action against; and thus the merry game goes on to the benefit of the unscrupulous and extortionate Pragwal and to the detriment of his more honest and less unprincipled competitor, the pilgrim being made the scapegoat in this competition between rival Pragwals.

* * * * * * * *

Within the last twelve months two cases have come to our notice in which two batches of respectable pilgrims were maltreated by two different Pragwals and extortionate attempts were made to realise from them sums of money which they were not willing to pay, and threats of force and wrongful restraint were used, though not actually carried out, as some respectable gentlemen of the locality interfered and saved the poor pilgrims from further molestation.

V.—LEGISLATION.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th October, 1906.

Murder of infants for the sake of ornaments.

96. The editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam points out in its issue of 26th October, the necessity for legislation regarding leaving children wearing ornaments without adequate protection, and thinks that parents neglecting their duty in this respect should forfeit the ornaments as a punishment for endangering the lives of their children through their carelessness.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
1st November 1906.

The Diwali festival.

97. The editor of the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), deplores in its issue of the 1st November, the freedom with which Muhammadans indulge in gambling, and suggests that leading Muhammadans should move the Government to impose further restrictions on gambling by extending the license only to a certain section of the Hindu community.

VI.—RAILWAY.

SITARA-I-HIND,
20th October, 1906.

Strikes on the East Indian Railways.

98. The Sitara-i-Hind (Moradabad), of 20th October, says that be the views of the Railway authorities what they may, the strikes on the East Indian Railway, besides being detrimental to mercantile interests and the travelling public, have caused immense pecuniary loss to the Railway, and have convinced the public of the inefficiency of the present railway administration.

JASUS,
21st October, 1906.

Contracts of bridges on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

99. The editor of the Jasus says in its issue of the 21st October, that now that the authorities have sufficient experience of the honesty and managing capacity of Lala Madan Mohan Lal, the contracts of the bridges on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway which he holds, should be cancelled like that for catering arrangements. He further suggests an inquiry into the relations between vendors of refreshments at the stations and Lala Madan Mohan Lal, which will no doubt substantiate the allegation that they are not really his servants; and concludes with the remark that certain papers are defending the contractors through mercenary motives, but will fail eventually to save him from the odium which he so richly deserves.

NIZM-UL-MULK,
24th October, 1906.

The contract of Railway bridges on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

100. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of 24th October, points out that Lala Madan Mohan, contractor, whose lease for catering arrangements has been only recently cancelled owing to his defective management, holds also leases of bridges on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway and that these likewise should be cancelled as no reliance can be placed on Madan Mohan Lal after the discovery of the fraud that he has been perpetrating on the public for a considerable length of time.

INDIAN PUNCH,
23rd October, 1906.

Female outrage in a railway train.

101. The editor of the Indian Punch (Budaun), of 23rd October, deprecates the leniency shown to the train guard, Mr. Alexander, who outraged the modesty of an Indian girl on 6th October, between Benares and Howrah, and points out that the conduct of

Mr. Alexander brings discredit on the entire community to which he belongs. He further remarks that the Anglo-Indian community would feel the force of such a sentence, if the example set in this case were followed in others, where they came in as complainants in cases of a similar nature, and expresses similar views in connection with the recent shooting case in the Lucknow Cantonments, where another Indian was the complainant.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
23rd October, 1906.

Catering arrangements.

102. The Cawnpore Gazette of 23rd October, points out that the railway authorities should arrange to provide fresh refreshments at a normal price so as to conduce to public convenience.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
24th October, 1906.

Traffic on the railway lines.

103. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of 24th October, invites the attention of the Railway Board to the want of sufficient accommodation for passengers and of a sufficiently large number of waggons to meet the requirements of tradesmen, who suffer heavy losses owing to delay in transit of goods.

BHARAT JIWAN,
29th October, 1906.

The Bengal and North-Western Railway booking office, Benares city.

104. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of 29th October, requests the authorities of the Bengal and North-Western Railway to open a booking office of their own in Benares city, or to combine it with that opened recently by the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway. The editor suggests also the desirability of opening an octroi office near the chauk.

VII.—Post Office.

JASUS,
21st October, 1906.

A general complaint in Rampur.

105. The Jásus (Agra) of 21st October says, that there is a general complaint against the licensed vendor of stamps at the Rampur post office, who compels the public to wait for a considerable length of time, and generally tells them that his stock of stamps of a certain value has been all spent, with a view to extort something over and above the fixed value from intending purchasers.

MUFID-I-AM,
1st November, 1906.

The Postal and Telegraph Guide.

106. The editor of the Mufid-i-Am (Agra) says in its issue of 1st November, that the publication of the Postal and Telegraph Guide in Urdu is calculated to lead to a much wider circulation and to produce beneficial results.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

UNION GAZETTE,
21st October 1906.

Split amongst Muhammadans at Pilibhit.

107. The editor of the Union Gazette (Bareilly), notices with regret in its issue of 21st October that the local Maulvi came to blows while trying to stop an outsider from preaching in the Juma Masjid, which he called his. The Muhammadan public felt highly offended at his behaviour, left the mosque in a body, and held an open air meeting when the outsider preached his sermon. He concluded with the remark that the local Muhammadans are thinking of performing their prayers in some other mosque on the coming Friday, owing to the behaviour of the Maulvi.

UNION GAZETTE,
28th October, 1906.

The pardah system in India.

108. The editor of the Union Gazette (Bareilly), says in its issue of the 28th October, that the attempt to break the pardah system is fraught with danger, as evidenced by the action of Miss Badr-ud-din Tyabji in marrying an Englishman while in England where she had been sent by her late father with a view to complete her education.

AL BASHIR,
30th October, 1906.

The third anniversary meeting of the Jalsai Wáz Islam, Muzaffarnagar.

109. Al Bashir (Etawah), of 30th October, says that the third anniversary meeting of the Jalsai Waz Islam was held on the 28th and 29th of September and the 1st and 2nd of October. The audience numbered about ten thousand men, and, as the subjects discussed were chiefly of a moral nature and dealt with education, both Hindus and Muhammadans attended the meetings with the result that it was a great success. Religious teaching imparted to Muhammadans, their technical education, and thrift on occasions of deaths and marriages received due consideration from the speakers. The expenses of the meeting were borne by a few enterprising gentlemen the first year; it became self-supporting in the second year of its existence; and a large surplus remains in hand at the end of this third anniversary, so that steps can be taken to ensure better primary education of Muhammadan boys in Muzaffarnagar.

110. A correspondent in the Indian Punch (Budaun), of 30th October, says that the Head Master of the Mission school at Bareilly, aided by one Chaubey Badri Prasad, is collecting subscriptions from Hindus and Muhammadans, with the view of starting an association, the aims and objects whereof have been hitherto kept a close secret. He suggests that the aim possibly will be to propagate Christianity, and to divert the funds thus collected to the purpose. The editor expresses his ignorance of the proposal referred to, and invites the correspondent to throw further light on the subject.

Collection of subscriptions at Bareilly.

INDIAN PUNCH,
30th October, 1906.

111. The Express (Lucknow) of 1st November, says with reference to the failure of the Madras Equitable Assurance Society, of which Messrs. Arbuthnot and Company were the secretaries and treasurers, that the general feeling in the city is that in a collapse of this magnitude the Government should step in and appoint a Commission of enquiry to restore confidence. Extraordinary general meetings are being called, of the various public institutions which have lost their funds, to consider their position. A special general meeting was called for the 31st October of the Anjuman-i-Islam, which has existed for 23 years, educating, feeding and teaching useful trades to 130 of the poorest boys in the Muhammadan community. This body has lost all its funds.

Failure of the Madras Equitable Assurance Society.

EXPRESS,
1st November, 1906.

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

112. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of 27th October, says that the sadhus and sanyasis are found in such large numbers in India, as they are fed without doing any work, that this accounts also for their laziness, and for the deceit they practise on honest house-holders. The editor says that Indian leaders should endeavour to exercise proper discrimination in showing charity.

Sadhus* and sanyasis.

AL BASHIR,
6th November, 1906.

The Anglo-Russian loan to Persia.

1. Al Bashir (Etawah), of 6th November, says that the conditions of the loan that Russia and England have agreed to advance to Persia are not yet known, but there can be no doubt that they will be calculated to bring about the ruin of Persia. The editor opines that this misfortune will be the result of the inability of the Persians to advance a loan of sixty lakhs of rupees to their sovereign in time of need. He points out that the Government of India owes crores of rupees, but can secure loans from its subjects at nominal interest whenever occasion arises; but the Persians are not prepared to advance the loan because they know that they will get no interest.

AL BASHIR,
6th November, 1906.

The Parliament of Persia and the Muhammadans of India.

2. A correspondent in Al Bashir of 6th November says that the representative form of Government has been established in Persia through the strenuous efforts of religious leaders, who have made it a point to study religion side by side with science and philosophy. He deduces certain conclusions from the institution of the representative form of government in Persia, and points out that perseverance is sure to lead to success irrespective of the sympathy of the sovereign power with the object aimed at by the nation. He is of opinion that the Indians are not yet prepared to profit by a change in the form of government, and suggests the desirability of spreading education amongst the illiterate masses.

(b).—Home.

RAHBAR,
28th October, 1906.

The Indian National Congress.

3. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th October, says that the Indian National Congress can properly speaking be said to represent the interests of educated Indians only, as its leaders have so far done nothing to disseminate a knowledge of politics amongst the ignorant masses. The editor suggests the desirability of establishing permanent Congress committees in all towns and cities for the purpose, and is glad to find that the Umballa Conference has made a move in this direction. He concludes with the hope that the propagation of political views will be much facilitated by the formation of these local committees.

RAHBAR,
28th October, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

4. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 28th October, says that the educated Muhammadans are not quite satisfied with the address as presented to the Viceroy, and cites the views of Nawab Muhammad Abdul Qadir Akhtar, the grandson of His Highness Nawab Azam Jan, the fourth Nawab of the Carnatic, in support of its statement. The editor says that the time will come when the Muhammadans who took an active part in presenting this address will have to admit their mistake in excluding the Hindus from the deputation.

TAFRIH,
7th November, 1906.

The Bengali deputation.

5. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 7th November, while referring to a piece of advice offered by the Statesman to the Bengalis to wait on the Viceroy and memorialize him in order to show that the Hindus are no less loyal than the Muhammadans, says that deeds and not words prove loyalty. The editor points out that there have been several occasions, amongst others the Mutiny of 1857, when the loyalty of the Hindus has been tested sufficiently, and that the subsequent favours of Government have become so impressed on their minds that they cannot but remain loyal and faithful. He then goes on to say that the Bengali deputation will not influence the public mind favourably, that it will rather detract from the faith reposed by the public in the Bengalis, and opines that mere opposition of the Government measures cannot be regarded as implying disaffection, and that it is on the contrary an indication of sincerity and candour of which all free nations must approve. He concludes with the remark, that Government has not lost its confidence in the Bengalis, as is shown by the fact that a Bengali and not a Muhammadan is the Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court.

TOHFA I HIND,
4th November,
1906.

Indian Colonists in Natal and Transvaal.

6. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of 4th November, suggests the desirability of appointing a commission to enquire into the maltreatment of Indian Colonists at the hands of Englishmen in Natal, and points out that effective measures should be adopted to stop the oppression. The editor also hopes that similar steps will be taken to redress the grievances of the Indian residents of Transvaal, whose case has already been taken up by Mr. Kennedy, who has gone to interview Lord Elgin about the matter in London.

CITIZEN,
5th November,
1906.

Indian coolies in Natal.

7. The Citizen (Allahabad) of the 5th November, says that accounts of the condition of Indian coolie emigrants just returned from Natal are indeed harrowing, and expresses a hope that the matter will engage the attention of the Government of India, and that steps will at once be taken for the protection of the Indian coolies abroad. Besides strict orders should be issued that no vessel should carry more than the allotted number of passengers.

RAHBAR,
7th November,
1906.

Colonists and Indians.

8. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 7th November, while remarking on the antipathy shown by English colonists towards Indians in Vancouver, Canada, Australia, South Africa and elsewhere, says that Englishmen cannot expect the Indians to feel attached to them, in view of the deplorable treatment they receive, though possibly the latter may not give vent to their feelings owing to the position they occupy as a subject race. The editor thinks that such a domineering attitude will not be conducive to the retention of a country which has come into the possession of the British by chance, and that no government can be looked upon as secure without winning the good-will of the people.

ANAND,
6th November, 1906.

The administration of India.

9. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 6th November, says that the means existing at present for bringing the grievances of the Indians to the notice of Parliament are inadequate, that the official reports and information furnished by retired Government servants are misleading, and that the Indian Press is not allowed to give free vent to public feeling. The editor suggests that the Liberal Government was prepared to make concessions to the Indians, but the attitude adopted by a certain section of the Muhammadan community over the partition of Bengal has tended to prejudice the mind of Parliament against the Hindu community. He concludes with the remark that no amount of political agitation can do India any good, if the existing Government is not prepared to initiate changes on its own responsibility.

HINDUSTANI,
7th November,
1906.

Oudh Policy or the Policy of sympathy.

10. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 7th November, express its gratification at the appearance of Mr. S. H. Butler's pamphlet entitled the "Oudh Policy" or the "Policy of sympathy" in which he has shown the extent to which progress, both moral and intellectual, has been made in Oudh during the last fifty years of British administration, and has pointed out that the policy of suspicion hitherto adopted in the administration of India has been a mistaken one.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
8th November,
1906.

Oudh Policy.

11. The editor of the Indian People, while discussing Mr. Butler's work on the Oudh Policy in its issue of 8th November, writes as follows:—There is one passage to which particular attention must be invited. "The treatment of Indian gentlemen as if they were English gentlemen, the treatment which they expect and deserve, has established many friendships unbroken and unbreakable in Agra and in Oudh. But in Oudh particularly the quality of friendship is not strained. The friendships between English officials and taluqdars are a tradition." It is this statement that has to be carefully examined. Mr. Butler's advice that Indian gentlemen should be treated like English gentlemen is invaluable, but what Indian gentlemen are implied? Here it is the taluqdars, but friendships of the same kind are reported from other places as well. For instance, the Hyderabad nobles are excellent friends with the English Residency and political officials, and in other Native States it is the same. Practically, the line is drawn at the wealthy landowner or the hereditary chief. The wealthiest among Indians are gentlemen. But the men of real brain-power, the successful lawyer and merchant, the man distinguished above others by his gifts, are outside this category. We know of District Magistrates who address letters to distinguished Indian gentlemen without the common courtesy of a distinctive appellation. And these are not inexperienced officers, but men who have grown grey in the service. Even these officers, when sitting at a Hyderabad noble's table or partaking of the hospitality of an Oudh taluqdar, would cheerfully call him a gentleman. Remember now that these officials are drawn, as Mr. Butler himself has reminded us, from a class of men who do not belong to the landowning class in England. They are merely selected by an open competitive examination. We do not say, that it is not entirely to their credit, but their social position in their own country does not correspond to that of great landowners in India. Of course so long as they are here they rank with the highest by virtue of their office, but that is not the same thing as the hereditary possession of great wealth and great influence. Still they are gentlemen, and they would not deny that title to English lawyers and merchants in India. In England an Oudh taluqdar would be a far more important personage than a retired Commissioner or Deputy Commissioner, who naturally passes into obscurity. It is necessary to impress upon officials the important fact that Indian gentlemen do not comprise the wealthy classes alone.

It is not merely due to the barons retaining their old position—though they hold only the semblance and not the reality—that Utopia exists in Oudh. The leaven which has created such a ferment in other parts of India has not yet reached that fertile province, and for that matter Agra either. The British Indian Association of Oudh was established on the same lines as the British Indian Association of Calcutta. The barons of Oudh regarded the zamindars of Bengal as their ideal, but while the latter have gone ahead the Oudh Taluqdars have been content to be left behind.

RAHBAR,
7th November, 1906.

Indian Army.

12. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th November, attributes the frequent desertion of European soldiers from the army to the unbearable hardships to which they have to submit, and of which they are kept ignorant when sent out to India. The editor remarks, that Government has been committing a great mistake in sending out young Europeans to India, and suggests that it can be rectified if it will but take its Indian subjects into confidence. In conclusion he remarks that Government does not wish to take a move in this direction though it knows that its treatment of its Indian subjects is not calculated to lead to contentment.

RAHBAR,
7th November, 1906.

The prosecution of the Punjabi (Lahore).

13. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th November, while referring to the prosecution of the Punjabi (Lahore) under section 153, Indian Penal Code, and to the suggestion made by the Telegraph to Government for instituting enquiries in connection with deaths caused by shooting and the begar system, asks if the Telegraph will consider such enquiries reliable and whether we can expect an impartial enquiry into such matters in view of the numerous atrocious murders of Indians by Europeans.

EXPRESS,
8th November, 1906.

Changes in the administration of Ajmer-Merwara Division.

14. The Express (Lucknow) of the 8th November, says on the authority of the Times of India, that one of the reasons which led to the establishment of the British Division of Ajmer-Merwara in the settlement of Rajputana was the desire to show the neighbouring Chiefs how a district should be managed. If the present controllers of the Rajputana Agency ever recall that intention, they must be not a little amused when they contrast it with the performance. The annual administration report for 1904-05 shows that in the office of Assistant Commissioner of Ajmer, there were four changes during the year, in the office of Assistant Commissioner of Merwara, there were five changes. As an achievement in the art of model administration we do not think much of it; if any native state was run on similar lines, it would get into trouble with the Agency. The report which records this brilliant accomplishment has just reached us.

JASUS,
November and December, 1906.

Representative Government in India.

15. The editor of the Hindi Jásus (Gahmar), says in its combined issue for November and December, that the king of Persia has won public commendation, by giving the people a Parliament of their own, that the Russians are dissatisfied with the Czar, merely because he is reluctant to allow the representative form of Government to replace autocracy, and that the Indians have been moving the British Government loyally and constitutionally to the same end for a considerable length of time. The editor says that it remains to be seen, when Government will feel such a course necessary.

PRADIP,
for November 1906.

The National Debt of India.

16. The Hindi Pradip (Allahabad) for November, attributes the national debt of India to a desire on the part of Government to improve the condition of Englishmen, and points out that the wealth of India has been drained to add to the prosperity of England. The editor says that India will regain its prosperity if this drain of Indian money can be checked for a few years. He concludes with the remark that the Indians are called uncivilized and semi-educated, and are being robbed of their money by Englishmen, who are making an empty boast of introducing a civilized form of government in the country.

OUDH AKHBAR,
10th November, 1906.

The tomb of Bahadur Shah.

17. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 10th November, says that the controversy between Messrs. Hyndman and Mac-Minn has once more attracted public attention to the tomb of Bahadur Shah, the late Moghul Emperor of Delhi. The editor suggests that Bahadur Shah was only a tool in the hands of the mutinous sepoys, and was no more responsible for accepting the throne of Delhi than Birjis Qadr, a lad of ten years who was placed on the throne of Lucknow after the removal of Wajid Ali Shah to Calcutta. He points out that the necessity of erecting a mausoleum on the site of Bahadur Shah's tomb forces itself on the public mind on national and historical grounds alike, and suggests that the Muhammadan public should be able to raise sufficient funds for the purpose, in case nothing is to be expected from Government.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

HINDOSTHAN,

Railways and telegraphy in Kabul.

18. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of 3rd November, while referring to the deputation of an official to work the wireless system of telegraphy in Kabul, says that the institution of the postal and telegraphic systems, and the construction of railways is a much needed measure for the advancement of a country, and suggests that the Amir should take early steps to start them in his kingdom.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

RAHBAR
28th October, 1906.

The Minister of Rampur.

19. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th October, while referring to the intention of His Highness the Nawab of Rampur, to separate the civil and revenue duties of the Minister, suggests that Munshi Muhammad Taj-ud-din, at present Sub-Judge at Kheri, will do remarkably well if placed at the head of the civil affairs in Rampur. The editor says that Munshi Muhammad Taj-ud-din is the nephew of Nawab Yar Jang Bahadur, deceased, who rendered valuable services to the State as judicial member of the Council of Regency, and possesses all the good qualities of his uncle.

NAIYAR I-AZAM,
5th November, 1906.

Zia-ul Haq of Rampur.

20. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of 5th November, says that Zia-ul Haq of Rampur has been convicted under section 385/511, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to two years' regorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000 or in default to a further term of imprisonment for six months.

JASUS,
28th October, 1906.

Rutlam.

21. The Jásus (Agra) of 28th October, invites the attention of His Highness the Maharaja of Rutlam and the authorities there, to the distressed condition of the poorer classes, due to the resumption of their rent free lands without any ostensible excuse. The editor suggests the desirability of early steps being taken to redress the grievances of the poor agricultural classes, and to remedy other evils existing in the administration of the State.

RAHBAR,
28th October, 1906.

A Congress at Kolhapur.

22. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 28th October, says that the reluctance of Government in conferring rights and privileges asked for by Indians, has undoubtedly produced a very healthy influence on some of the raises of India. His Highness the Maharaja of Kolhapur for instance has accorded permission to his subjects to have a Congress of their own, with a view to facilitate the representation of their grievances to the State. The Kolhapur Congress will work on the same lines as the Indian National Congress.

Jaipur.

JASUS,
20th October, 1906.

23. The Jasus (Agra) of the 20th October, says that a general dissatisfaction prevails amongst the students of the Maharaja's College at Jaipur, which is being practically monopolized by the friends and relatives of the Principal who is a Bengali, and that some of the leading non-Bengali teachers have resigned for want of encouragement while certain others have managed to get their services transferred to other departments in the State and made room for the Bengalis. The Science Professor, who is quite unfit for the post he holds, is a relation of the Principal, who is reported to have told students complaining against the Science Professor to make their own arrangements, as he himself could make no better provision.

Jaipur.

JASUS,
7th November, 1906.

24. The editor of the Jásus (Agra), of the 7th November, says, with reference to a letter from Jaipur pointing out the falsity of certain statements in its previous issues regarding the maladministration of the State, that making suggestions for the amelioration of the condition of a state is much more preferable than Government interference. He opines that Government should exercise direct control over all Native States with the exception of Baroda, Gwalior and Mysore, unless there is a decided improvement in their administration.

Jaipur.

JASUS,
7th November, 1906.

25. A correspondent in the Jásus (Agra), of 7th November, reports that the religious differences between the Shias and Sunnis in Jaipur are coming to a crisis and will, it is feared, bring about serious consequences, as the Shias are ardently desirous of getting two maulvis beaten, because their lectures in connection with social reforms are not in consonance with their views. He suggests the desirability of the editor addressing the parties concerned with a view to the matter being settled amicably.

Another correspondent reports that Jaipur abounds in incompetent and corrupt officials, and the minister, though well aware of their malpractices, takes no notice of the matter for the simple reason that they remain in attendance on him and flatter him constantly.

Jaipur.

RAHBAR,
7th November, 1906.

26. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of 7th November, while commending Rao Raja Sahib of Sikar in the Jaipur state for interdicting the use of foreign sugar in his estate, exhorts other Native States to follow his good example, and advises the Rao Sahib to keep a close eye on the trade of sugar, at least for sometime, lest self-interest should lead the dealers in sugar to impose on the public and to adopt surreptitious means of introducing foreign sugar in the state.

The Nizam of Hyderabad.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th November, 1906.

27. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 5th November, says that due regard being had to surrounding circumstances, the Nizam of Hyderabad stands no chance of a favourable comparison with the Amir of Kabul, who has earned the title of Shah owing to perseverance and enterprise, and is much unlike the Nizam, who, though possessing equally or perhaps more extensive dominions, has done nothing even by way of social and moral reform to merit that title. He has done nothing to encourage arts and sciences, nor to propagate education in his dominions, which are torn by internal dissensions, nor has he any real independence like the Amir.

The Nizam of Hyderabad.

RAHBAR,
7th November, 1906.

28. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 7th November, expresses its regret at the inattention of the Nizam of Hyderabad towards the technical education of his subjects, and condemns the manner in which large sums of money are being squandered in patronizing Englishmen, who are monopolizing every department in the State to the exclusion of Natives. The editor holds Natives responsible for the existing state of affairs, and considers that they can command the respect of others only when they respect themselves.

MOHINI,
6th November, 1906.

Education in Baroda.

29. The Mohini (Kanauj) of the 6th November, says that the Maharaja of Baroda has opened small libraries in villages throughout his dominions with a view to promote education. The editor says that other Native states might follow the example with great advantage.

AL ISLAM,
12th October, 1906.

Partition cases in Mainpuri.

30. Al Islam (Aligarh) of the 12th October, received on 8th November, invites the attention of the Board of Revenue to the harassing inconvenience experienced by the zamindars of the Mainpuri district in connection with partition cases, and suggests the desirability of steps being taken to redress their grievances at an early date.

RAHBAR,
28th October, 1906.

The Jamalpur shooting case.

31. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th October, while commenting on the result of the Jamalpur shooting case, says that the evidence of the six independent witnesses produced was not looked upon by the trying magistrate as sufficient for a conviction. The editor is afraid that the ends of justice will not be satisfied until the case goes before the High Court, and concludes with the remark that Anglo-Indian officers are losing public confidence, which will produce very baneful results eventually.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
4th November, 1906.

Prosecution of Nazar Husain, Vakil of Bijnor.

32. The Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 4th November, says that Qazi Nazar Husain, a local vakil referred to at paragraph 24 of Selections No. 32 for 1906, has been convicted of criminal breach of trust and sentenced to one day's imprisonment and a fine of one hundred rupees.

ADVOCATE,
8th November, 1906.

The Lucknow student's case.

33. The Advocate (Lucknow). of 8th November, says that Major Parker, Cantonment Magistrate, who has by his curious procedure of administering criminal justice within the limits of the Lucknow Cantonments managed to agitate the minds of the Indian residents there, a few instances of which we have already given, has created a sensation in the city by passing what we cannot but call an outrageous sentence on a student of the Queen's School. The case has been the subject of general talk and angry comments in the city, which could have been avoided had the captain been a little discreet. The facts as far as we have come to know are that on Wednesday last a student named Beni Madhab was passing on the Cantonment Road in an ekka occupied by three other persons. Mr. Scott, Assistant Magistrate, a new arrival here from the Frontier Province, was behind the ekka on a trap with a lady. He called out to the ekkawala to be on the left which the driver did not mind or hear. Mr. Scott had to pass by the ekka on the right, very close to it. While passing he heard somebody saying bahan—d bhiraiye deta hai. Mr. Scott pulled up, enquired who used the expression; the people in the ekka denied having uttered it. Thereupon he took the number of the ekka and reported the matter to the District Superintendent of Police who challaned all the occupants of the ekka. The case came up for hearing before the Cantonment Magistrate. Mr. Scott's syce identified Beni Madhab as the person who used the expression. Mr. Scott was later on called, and he deposed to the effect that he was unable to say who used the expression but he had heard it and the man sitting on the right must have used it. Thereupon the other three persons were discharged and the statement of Beni Madhab was taken which was rather rambling. He said that he did not use the abusive terms, and, if he had done so, it was for the ekkawala whom he chided at colliding the ekka with the Sahib's trap. This was disbelieved by the magistrate, and Major Parker sentenced the boy to seven days' imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 50, saying in his judgment that he would have inflicted a severer punishment for abusing a European on a public street but for the youth of the boy. The boy, applied on Friday through Mr. O'Neil, barrister-at-law, for bail which application was rejected by the Sessions Judge, who said he would hear the appeal on Monday. The case was argued on that day and Mr. Griffin upheld the conviction but thought the boy had been sufficiently punished and ordered his release.

We are not prepared to believe that any boy would wantonly use any abusive terms to a European, much less when accompanied by a lady, and that without any provocation. The probability is that Beni Madhab, who his teachers testified was a well behaved boy, was as usual with ill-mannered young men in the habit of mixing abusive words in conversation without meaning any ill to anybody. And we wonder that this did not occur to a Civilian of such standing as Mr. Griffin, who could have saved the boy's future from blasting. When he admitted the appeal he had no reason to refuse bail which was very necessary in order to save the boy from jail contamination as it was apparent that the boy could not have absconded for fear of imprisonment. Major Parker ought to have known that the Government were anxious to save boys from jail life by sending even such of them as are found guilty of greater offences to reformatory schools. But if he pleads ignorance, we have a right to expect Mr. Griffin to know the benevolent intentions of the Government. We very much regret that Beni Madhab, who ought to have been punished by the headmaster of his school, had been dragged to the criminal courts. And it is these unfortunate cases that unnecessarily excite bad feeling,

ANAND,
6th November,
1906.

Judgeship in the Calcutta High Court.

34. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 6th November, while referring to the suggestions made by the Advocate, recommending Mr. Muhammad Rafiq, barrister-at-law, to the vacancy on the bench of the Calcutta High Court, says that if the profession of Islam is the criterion for the selection, the appointment should be conferred on the staunchest Muhammadan of those suggested by the Press.

HINDUSTANI,
7th November,
1906.

Judgeship in the Calcutta High Court.

35. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 7th November, says that the vacancy caused on the retirement of Sir Madhab Chander Ghosh will be filled up by some Muhammadan barrister-at-law, and suggests that the claims of Indian Judges, vakils and barristers-at-law alike should be taken into consideration in making the selection. The editor regrets to notice that the name of M. Muhammad Rafiq, barrister-at-law, has not been mentioned in the list of candidates eligible for the appointment.

OUDH AKHBAR,
7th November,
1906.

Oaths administered in courts.

36. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 7th November, says that courts must satisfy themselves that oaths are administered in a form and manner binding on the witnesses, on whose evidence the decision of a fact in issue depends, and suggests that the form should vary in each case according to the moral susceptibilities of the witnesses to whom the oath is administered.

GARHWALI,
for October, 1906.

Remission of revenue in Garhwal.

37. The Garhwali (Dehra Dun) for October, says that crops in certain tracts of Garhwal have been carried away by floods and a considerable number of lives of men and cattle have been lost during the year. The editor suggests therefore a remission of land revenue in the parts suffering from famine.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR,
28th October, 1906.

The sale of intoxicants in India.

38. The Prayag Samachar (Allahabad) of the 28th October, regards the sale of intoxicants as a blot on British administration, which though a source of revenue to Government, is leading the nation to sure destruction. The editor says that the English public are at present discussing the evil results of the extensive sale of intoxicants, and would sacrifice their vast revenues brought in by the sale of opium and liquor rather than see the Indian nation degenerate day by day. He concludes with the remark that the well-being of the ruling power always depends on the well-being of the people, and hopes that Government will make this its guiding principle in its dealings with Indians.

SITARA-I-HIND,
12th October, 1906.

Thefts in Moradabad.

39. The Sitára-i-Hind (Moradabad), of 12th October, received on 4th November, says that thefts are on the increase in the city, and expresses a hope that its action in noticing the matter, while its local contemporaries are silent, will not be attributed to any ill-will against the local police.

JASUS,
28th Ocober, 1906.

Bogus advertisem ents in Kanauj.

40. A correspondent in the Jasus (Agra) of the 28th October, complains of a number of unscrupulous dealers in perfumes who make a living by issuing bogus advertisements regarding the sale of excellent perfumes, and swindle the public by selling articles of a very inferior quality. He cities the names of certain of these dealers, and says that he himself has been duped by such advertisements.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
8th November,
1906.

The Kotwali of Allahabad.

41. The Indian People (Allahabad), of 8th November, says that, for some time past the Masnad of the Kotwali of Allahabad is being graced in turn by a couple of police officers, Thakur Kashi Singh and S. Anwar Ali. The reason for this repeated change of incumbents, and that too between two particular officers, is not known to the public, and the result is that all sorts of gossips and bazar gups are set afloat to account for the alternate ascendancy of one and the retirement of the other. Though nobody attaches any importance to the bazar rumours, yet they certainly have a tendency to influence the public mind in assigning imaginary motives for the temporary rise of one, and the fall of the other. In fact people wonder as to why the choice should lie between two particular officers. If Thakur Kashi Singh was not considered competent to hold charge of the office of City Kotwal of Allahabad, why was he put in there at all for a few months only, or if the exigencies of the public service required his presence elsewhere, why could not a third person be found in the whole Police force of the United Provinces, who could have succeeded him? Again, if Shaikh Anwar Ali's services were required to be transferred from the Criminal Intelligence Department why could he not be sent in place of the officer who was brought in to replace him? These are some of the questions which the public ask and cannot find a proper answer.

Of course Kotwal Kashi Singh carries with him the good wishes of the public. He was popular with all classes of people and his honesty, simplicity and strict sense of duty are too well known to require any fresh mention from us. The regret is, that such a popular officer is not allowed to retain charge of the city police for some time at least.

INDIAN PUNCH,

Sale of meat in Budaun.

44. The Indian Punch (Budaun), of the 6th November, says that old and unhealthy goats are not seldom killed for purposes of meat supply in Budaun, and that all that the municipality cares for, is the tax it receives from the butchers.

SULAIMANI

The Municipality of Benares.

45. The Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares) of the 9th October, received on 8th November, invites the attention of the local Municipal board to the considerable delay and public inconvenience resulting from its dilatory action, in deciding applications for the repair and erection of buildings.

BARANASI,
16th October, 1906.

Bad roads and insufficient lights in Benares Municipality.

46. The Baranasi (Benares) of 16th October, makes a general complaint of bad roads which are insufficiently lighted throughout the Benares municipality, and suggests the desirability of having the roads paved all over with stones. The editor condemns the existing drainage arrangements.

ADVOCATE,
1st November,
1906.

House accommodation in Cantonments.

47. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 1st November, says with reference to an enquiry now being made by a committee of some military officers as to the reasons why the capitalists no more build new houses in cantonments, that the ways of the military officers are martial and unless they amend them or at least place private house property within Cantonments under the control of civil officers, who are to follow certain regulations, nothing can come out of the enquiries that are being now made.

* * * * * * * *

The house-owners ask, that the property should be valued by a civil engineer who shall pay some regard to the investment made. The house-owners complain that under paragraph 96 (a) of the Cantonment Code, the Cantonment authorities may order the removal of the existing boundary-walls, hedges or other fences; and under (6) may order the construction of boundary walls or fences of any materials they please.

* * * * * * * *

Speaking of the Lucknow Cantonment, we hear of a curious case. A military doctor living in the mess house of the Royal Dragoons declared, that he was badly impressed with the kitchen of the mess-house; it was badly ventilated, ill-constructed, and was in a dilapidated state, it should be pulled down on sanitary grounds. The sanitary officer agreed with his subordinate. On the house owner's protest, the Cantonment Committee inspected the kitchen. These defects were not pointed out, but the Committee ordered the house-owner to put iron funnels over the fireplaces for the smoke to escape. The house-owner again protested against this arbitrary order : he pointed out that as charcoal was used, there was no smoke, and there was enough provision for the discharge of fumes. The order was then cancelled. The house-owner saved himself the loss because he was influential and a member of the Cantonment Committee. We can well imagine what would have been the fate of an Indian house-owner with no voice in the deliberations of the Committee.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
7th November, 1906.

Complaints against the Municipal Board of Agra.

48. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 7th November, says that the Agra public is much dissatisfied with the working of the local municipal board on account of its extravagance, heavy taxation, and connivance at the breach of bye-laws and local orders which result in public annoyance and inconvenience.

JASUS,
7th November, 1906.

Sanitary arrangements in Agra.

49. A correspondent in the Jásus (Agra), of 7th November, expresses his dissatisfaction at the inattention of the district authorities to his complaints regarding unsatisfactory sanitary arrangements in Kapurthala, which are calculated to spread contagious diseases.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR,
16th October, 1906.

System of debates in the Hindu College, Benares.

50. The editor of the Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares) says in its issue of the 16th October, received on 8th November, that the system of debating introduced in imitation of the Parliamentary debates at home, in the Central Hindu College at Benares is calculated to lead to beneficial results. Politics and matters relating to the administration of the College are scrupulously avoided.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
8th November, 1906.

The Central Hindu College.

51. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 8th November, says that in the Government Resolution reviewing Mr. Lewis's last report on public instruction in these provinces credit is taken for the encouragement given to several independent institutions, including the Central Hindu College at Benares. Whether it is done directly or by implication, such a statement involves a gross perversion of facts. We do not wish to fix the responsibility upon any one in particular, but there can be no denying the fact that the Central Hindu College has met with bitter and persistent official opposition from the very beginning. Compare for one moment the treatment of this institution, now the centre of an immense and beneficent activity, with that accorded to a similar institution, the Anglo-Oriental Muhammadan College at Aligarh. Opposition, either active or passive, was offered to the Hindu College at every step, and it was in spite of such opposition that the College was established and has proved such a signal success. The visit of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales to the college has probably put an end to official opposition, but the Local Government has no reason to feel proud of the treatment it has all along accorded to that institution.

TOHFA-I-HIND,
4th November,
1906.

Education in the United Provinces.

52. The editor of the Tohfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), says, in its issue of the 4th November, that education has made considerable progress in the United Provinces during the incumbency of Mr. Lewis as Director of Public Instruction, and that his success is due in a great measure to the liberality of His Honour Sir James Digges La Touche and his predecessor Sir Antony MacDonnell.

ZUL QARNAIN,
7th November, 1906.

The One Rupee Fund of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

53. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun) of the 7th November, exhorts influential Muhammadans to exert themselves in collecting subscriptions from their fellow-citizens all over the United Provinces on the occasion of the ensuing Id festival, and asks them to send in their requisitions for the one rupee fund pass books. The editor concludes with the assurance that every Muhammadan will come forward to contribute one rupee to the college fund with the greatest willingness.

RAHBAR,
7th November,
1906.

The new Inspectorships in the Education Department.

54. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th November, says that of the three new Inspectorships created in the Education Department in the United Provinces, one goes to a Muhammadan and two to Christians. The editor points out the proportion that the Hindus bear to these communities in the United Provinces, and adds that they are in no respect inferior to other communities. He apprehends that the antipathy shown to the Bengalis is being extended to the Hindus of these Provinces, and concludes with the remark that the Hindus are beginning to understand the difference between slavery and freedom, that they know that service strikes at the root of a number of virtues, and that they will not therefore memorialize Government, but it is desirable all the same that the Government, which is so proud of its justice, should not fail to mete out even-handed justice to the several communities under its rule.

OUDH AKHBAR,
9th November,
1906.

The Persian course in the Allahabad University.

55. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 9th November, complains of the stiffness of the course prescribed for the several examinations of the Allahabad University in Persian, and invites the attention of the Chancellor and the Vice-Chancellor to the matter. He remarks that a knowledge of Arabic, as now prescribed is not at all compulsory under the University Act of 1904, and that the innovation is unique, and not insisted on in other Universities. It betrays besides, that those responsible for this change have themselves a very poor knowledge and cannot understand the requirements of students. He concludes with the remark that students generally are taking to the science course in preference to Persian, Arabic and Sanskrit.

The Partition-day at Benares.

56. The Baranasi (Benares) of the 23rd October, says that the Benares public observed the 16th of October with every possible solemnity, and that Hindus and Muhammadans exchanged rakhis freely with one another in token of the union and protest against the partition of Bengal. Vows were renewed to desist from the use of foreign sugar.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
28th October, 1906.

Partition meeting in Sirajganj.

57. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Pilibhit), of 28th October, says that a meeting was held on 21st October last at Sirajganj with a view to protest against the partition of Bengal, and that Maulvi Shirazi and others delivered speeches and exposed the tricks practised by certain leading Muhammadans with a view to mislead the public, and to impress Government with the idea that the Muhammadans look upon the partition as beneficial to their community. The meeting was a grand success in every way. On the day following Maulvi Shirazi was served by the Sub-divisional Magistrate with a notice to show cause why he should not be bound over to keep the peace under section 107, C. P. C. He was taken under arrest the same day, and released on bail of one thousand rupees. The editor says that the action of the police and of the Sub-divisional Magistrate has given occasion for much public dissatisfaction in Sirajganj.

RAHBAR,
28th October, 1906.

The partition of Bengal.

58. The editor of the Rahbar (Moradabad), says, in its issue of the 28th October, that the partition of Bengal, though intended originally to injure Indian interests, has proved very beneficial to the country, and that it has awakened the Indians to a sense of patriotism, and led them to promote the swadeshi movement. The Bengalis observed the partition with the utmost strictness, as is evident from the refusal of the family priest of one Ram Charan Lal Pal to aid him in performing religious rites on the ground that he had food cooked in his house on the partition-day. The Rakhi-bandhan is the next ceremony inaugurated by the partition, and inculcates co-operation amongst the inhabitants of Bengal. This fellow-feeling extends to the whole of India and is no longer confined to Bengal alone.

ARYA MITRA,
1st November, 1906.

The partition of Bengal.

59. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of 1st November, while referring to the reply given by Mr. John Morley informing Earl Percy that the question regarding the partition of Bengal was to be regarded as finally settled, says that this will be a death-blow to the Bengalis.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
1st November, 1906.

The partition-day in Calcutta.

60. The Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Gorakhpur), of the 1st November, says that Maulvi Muhammad Yusuf, Khan Bahadur, who presided at the anti-partition meeting held on the 16th October at Calcutta, expressed his personal feelings and ideas in his presidential address on the occasion, and did not speak as the representative of the Central Muhammadan Association. The editor says that the grievances of the Bengalis in connection with the partition are only imaginary, that the Muhammadans feel obliged to hold themselves aloof from the Hindus because they are far behind the Hindus in education and are not prepared to walk abreast with their more advanced brethren. The Hindus besides look upon them as impure, and do not like to mix freely with the Muhammadans. He admits that Government appointments are no doubt the bone of contention between Hindus and Muhammadans, and asks if Hindus are prepared to forego their claims to Government appointments, in favour of Muhammadans in view of the fact that trade furnishes better means for promoting the interests of both communities. He opines that the Bengalis are making a great mistake in wasting their energies over the partition of Bengal, and concludes with an exhortation to the Muhammadans to make common cause like the Bengalis in securing their interests as a community.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
4th November, 1906.

The partition of Bengal.

61. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 4th November, says with reference to Mr. Morley's growing disinclination to re-open the question of the partition of Bengal, that the fact is that Indians are not yet treated seriously by any Government. They are to be either cajoled or coerced, but they are not to have anything in their own way or any wrong set right. Therefore, partition or no partition, and without any hope of relief from Mr. Morley or any other quarter, the national movement must go on throughout India and the industrial emancipation of the country must be attained as soon as possible.

ANAND,
6th November, 1906.

The partition of Bengal.

62. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 6th November, says that an anti-partition meeting was organized and attended by five thousand Muhammadans to protest against the partition of Bengal at Sirajganj. The editor suggests, that this leaves no room for further hostile criticism of the conduct of the Hindus exclusively, and that if Muhammadans continue to behave as they have at Sirajganj, the Anglo-India Press will have to choose some other community on whom to shower their encomiums of loyalty to Government.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
4th November, 1906.

The Barisal cases.

63. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 4th November, says with reference to the acquittal of Mr. Kemp and his assistants in the Barisal cases, that it is reported that at the last trial the prosecuting counsel attacked Mr. Kemp severely, called him a liar, and also fell foul of several others, including Sir Bampfylde Fuller himself. Very probably he did, but this modicum of satisfaction need not be grudged when there was no other satisfaction to be had from the defendants. Mr. Kemp's feat at Barisal is not likely to be repeated, but in future there will be a stronger chance of heads being broken on both sides.

OUDH AKHBAR,
6th November,
1906.

Mr. Morley and the Bengalis.

64. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 6th November, expresses its highest satisfaction at learning that Mr. Morley has expressed a desire to reconcile the Bengalis by making generous concessions, and hopes that the partition of Bengal may yet be set aside at no distant date. The editor concludes with the remark that nothing can be said for certain in the absence of an official announcement, but be that as it may, the Bengalis have taken the partition seriously to heart, and are deeply affected by this misfortune.

SWADESH BANDHAVA,
for September, 1906.

Swadeshism.

65. A correspondent in the Swadesh Bándhava (Agra), for September, exhorts the public to propagate swadeshism, and to inculcate wherever they go the use of articles of indigenous manufacture. He says, that they should not lose heart, if they sustain losses in the beginning, as profit in the end is certain. The advice if acted upon will stop Indian money from going into foreign countries, and thus add to the wealth of India. He also points out, that indigenous products are more durable than foreign manufactures, and concludes with the remark that self-sacrifice is necessary for promoting the interests of the country.

Another correspondent expresses similar views on the subject and exhorts the Indians to give up the use of foreign articles. He makes particular mention of foreign sugar, and refers to the mode of refining it as extremely revolting. He concludes with advising the Indians to follow the example of Japan, and to do everything in their power to promote the swadeshi movement.

SULAIMANI AKKBAR,
23rd October 1906.

The swadeshi movement,

66. The Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares) of the 23rd October, received on 8th November, feels extremely gratified at the success attending the swadeshi movement, and opines that foreign merchants must be feeling much mortified at receiving no orders for the supply of piece-goods from India.

HINDOSTHAN,
3rd November, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

67. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of 3rd November, says that the Marwaris who are the Jews of India, are beginning to discard foreign articles, and are stocking their firms with indigenous manufactures, with a view to monopolize the swadeshi trade, and thereby to make good the loss they have sustained owing to the opposition met with by foreign products. The editor says that Indians should spare themselves no pains so as to manufacture articles excelling foreign products in beauty, quality and cheapness.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR.
4th November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

68. The Prayag Samachar (Allahabad), of the 4th November, says that the swadeshi movement has nothing novel about it is apparent from a reference to the Hindi papers for the last twenty years. The editor thinks that the movement is quite independent of politics, that people make a great mistake when giving it a political aspect, which perhaps is due to the fact that the question was taken up with renewed vigour at the time of the partition of Bengal. The movement can in no way be opposed to the policy of the British Government, as England is not the only country from which things are imported into India. He concludes with the remark that the education imparted to Indians at state expense is a sure proof of the fact that the British Government has the interest of Indians as much at heart as of Englishmen, and that those who treat the swadeshi movement from a political standpoint are causing disaffection in the country.

BHARAT JIWAN,
5th November,
1906.

The wadeshi movement.

69. A correspondent in the Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 5th November, exhorts the Indians to boycott foreign articles, and invokes the aid of well-to-do men, of Rajas and Maharajas in establishing manufactories and opening firms with a view to promote indigenous arts and manufactures. He proposes that each community should punish such of its members as do not give up the use of foreign articles.

Another correspondent exhorts the Indian public to refrain from using foreign sugar as the blood of cows and swine is used in its refinement.

BHARAT JIWAN,
5th November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

70. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of 5th November, says that a grand meeting consisting of about ten thousand men was held at Bombay, to promote indigenous arts and manufactures. The wealthiest mill-owners and the most intellectual of men living in Bombay were present at the meeting, the advantages resulting from the swadeshi movement were discussed at length, and Mr. Tilak, one of the speakers, suggested that it was highly desirable that the Indians should monopolize the trade of the country, so as to prevent crores of Indian money from going into foreign countries.

CITIZEN,
5th November, 1906.

High-handedness of police and the swadeshi movement at Mymensingh.

71. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 5th November, says that on Saturday Rajendralal Saha of Balla swadeshi case fame who was sent to jail for complicity in a case of boycotting was to be released from the Mymensing jail after the expiry of the term of his imprisonment.

* * * * * * * *

About one hundred boys and a few gentlemen were there. Apparently being informed by the jail authorities, a police force numbering about sixty constables armed with regulation lathis under the leadership of Mr. Roddis, Police Superintendent, soon appeared there. Then followed a scene of bewilderment and bloodshed. The constables first ordered the crowd to disperse using the most filthy language. The crowd began to retreat in a quiet manner driven by the policemen. Suddenly a constable struck a boy of tender age with a lathi. The boy fell down but was saved by a police officer. Just then Mr. Roddis came on horseback and after ordering the Muhammadans to retire rode amidst the crowd. Soon a whistle was heard and the cry of "mar," "mar"! was raised. At this signal constables attacked the flying crowd, and freely used lathis, causing wounds and fractures on many boys, who with broken heads and swollen limbs took shelter in the nearest huts, but constables even pursued them there, violating the zenana. The Secretary of the Suhrid Samiti swooned under the severe belabouring to which he was subjected. Twelve boys got severe wounds and twenty were slightly injured. All these manœuvres were for preventing the people from escorting Rajendra after release.

MOHINI,
6th November, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

72. The Mohini (Kanauj) of the 6th November, says that sufficient interest has not been evinced so far in the swadeshi movement, and that the reports received about meetings held in different cities are confined to the boycott of foreign sugar only. The editor suggests the desirability of boycotting all foreign articles, and points that the poverty of India is due to the fact that Indians do not encourage indigenous products.

ANAND,
6th November, 1906.

The Marwaris and the swadeshi movement.

73. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 6th November, disapproves of the suggestion of the Hitbadi (a Bengali paper) to oust the Marwaris from the swadeshi bazar owing to their having held themselves aloof from the swadeshi movement, and opines that this sort of action will tend to hamper the progress of the latter.

RAHBAR,
7th November, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

74. A correspondent in the Rahbar (Moradabad), of 7th November, appeals to the Indians to make common cause in promoting Indian arts and industries, exhorts them to use indigenous articles and to take Japan as their model in this direction. He further points out the folly of exporting Indian cotton to foreign countries and of receiving piece-goods at very high prices in return.

KAYASTH HITKARI,
8th November, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

75. The editor of the Kayasth Hitkári (Agra), of 8th November, says that the swadeshi movement has not made any marked progress, because little practical work has actually been attempted. The public besides do not seem to appreciate indigenous products, because they lack the finish and beauty of foreign articles and are more expensive; and it is highly desirable that they should be impressed with the idea, that they are far more durable than articles imported from other countries. He concludes with the remark that dealers in home-made fabrics should take as little profit as they can until they can compete with foreign artizans and manufacturers in excellence.

OUDH AKHBAR,
9th November, 1906.

The swadeshi movement in Ireland.

76. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 9th November, reproduces an article from the Observer (Lahore), pointing out that Irishmen are exhorting their countrymen to use articles of exclusively Irish manufacture, which alone can prevent the drain of the wealth of the country; and are taking steps to revive their national language, which is second to Sanskrit only in point of antiquity.

OUDH AKHBAR,
9th November, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

77. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 9th November, says that a meeting was held at Charbagh (Lucknow), on the 4th November, to promote the cause of the swadeshi movement, that it was attended by about one thousand men, that it began and ended with a recitation of the Bande Matram song, and that speeches were delivered to encourage indigenous products generally in preference to articles of foreign manufacture. The meeting was a grand success and it was resolved to hold another meeting at Thakurganj, Lucknow, on the following Sunday.

BHARAT JIWAN,
5th November, 1906.

Foreign sugar.

78. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of 5th November, says that the local ahirs mustered strong on 2nd November, and resolved at a meeting held at the Gopal mandir to renounce foreign sugar. The editor asks, if persons belonging to the three regenerate classes, who still continue to use foreign sugar will not give up its use even on finding Sudras undertaking to do so.

ARYA MITRA,
1st November, 1906.

Scarcity of thread in British manufactories.

79. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of 1st November, says that work in English manufactories has come to a standstill for want of thread. The editor opines that if things continue as they are the manufactories will remain closed for months.

RAHBAR,
28th October, 1906

The poverty of India.

80. The editor of the Rahbar (Moradabad), says, in its issue of the 28th October, that the ever-increasing poverty of India is due to the fact, that thirty crores of rupees are passing out of the country annually. As regards the scarcity of grain, he says that it is exported in very large quantities even in years of famine, and the people cannot get money in spite of their willingness to sell the grain they possess. He concludes with the remark that in view of the reasons set forth it is a mistake to say that India is prospering under the British rule.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR,
28th October, 1906.

The British rule in India.

81. The Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), of the 28th October, regards the British rule in India as a great improvement, over the tyranny of Muhammadans, but regrets that Government is not meting out even-handed justice between Englishmen and Indians.

KAYASTH HITKARI,
1st November, 1906.

The policy of the Government of India.

82. The Káyasth Hitkári (Agra), of 1st November, disfavours agitation on the ground that Government has to adapt its policy to suit the times, and says that British rule is just and benign, and that the Hindus, with whom loyalty is part of their creed, forget the tenets of their own faith and imitate European ways and manners, when they take to agitation. The editor suggests that the Hindus should make their demands loyally and constitutionally, and should rest assured that Government will listen to them.

OUDH AKHBAR,
5th November, 1906.

The Indians and their British rulers.

83. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow) of the 5th November, says that Englishmen naturally are very courteous in their treatment of Indians, but change their opinions as they come in contact with selfish natives, who do not hesitate to injure the cause of the country provided they can serve their private ends. The editor says that those in authority do not, however, fail to find out the motives actuating selfish slanderers of the country, as was evidenced by the reply given recently by the Commissioner of the division to certain unprincipled Muhammadans who presented a memorial against the Indian administration in Umballa, which was really an attack on the Hindu district authorities there.

AN NASIR,
8th October, 1906.

The rule of His Honour Sir James Digges LaTouche.

84. An nasir (Budaun), of the 8th October, received on 8th November, expresses its heartfelt gratitude for the various boons conferred by His Honour Sir James Digges LaTouche during his beneficent rule, and invites the opinions of its contemporaries to make suggestions for perpetuating the memory of His Honour's period of office in the United Provinces.

ARYA MITRA,
1st November, 1906

The strained relations between Englishmen and Indians.

85. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of 1st November, says that the feelings between Indians and Englishmen are becoming more and more strained, and that the Indians are brooding over their misfortunes and devising means to check the high-handedness of the ruling race. The editor says that Englishmen are watching the movements of Indians, and suggests that the visit of Mr. Stead, the editor of the Review of Reviews, with a number of other leading editors of the English Press, will very likely tend to make the relations between Indians and Englishmen more friendly. He is afraid, however, that it is equally possible that the English Press may become all the more hostile after Mr. Stead's visit to India.

The attitude of Anglo-Indians towards Indians.

ARYA MITRA,
1st November, 1906.

86. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of 1st November, says that the attitude of Anglo-Indians towards Indians, is becoming unbearable in the extreme, and cites the case of the officer commanding the forces quartered at Jhang, who does not allow Indians to use umbrellas in his presence. The editor asks, if Government cannot put a stop to things of this sort.

The Anglo-Indian officials and the Hindus.

MOHINI,
2nd November, 1906.

87. The Mohini (Kanauj), of 2nd November, while referring to the service of a notice by the District Magistrate of Mymensingh, on one Babu Shoshi Kumar Bose, to show cause why he should not be proceeded against under section 295 of the Indian Penal Code, for having pulled down a Muhammadan dargáh (shrine) situated on his land, with a view to build a temple dedicated to Kali, says that this illustrates the readiness with which Anglo-Indian officials believe the charges brought by Muhammadans against the Hindus.

The attitude of Anglo-Indian officers towards Indians.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
8th November, 1906.

88. The Áwáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 8th November, publishes a dialogue between the editor and a well-to-do Muhammadan rais who was turned out with disgrace by an Anglo-Indian official, and remarks in conclusion that Indians are born to be abused and maltreated by Europeans, in whom every virtue is supposed to be centred.

The attitude of the Anglo-Indian Press towards the Native press.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR,
23rd October, 1906.

89. The Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares) of the 23rd October, received on 8th November, resents the suggestion made by Anglo-Indian papers, to repress the Indian Press owing to its tendency to spread disaffection against Government. The editor considers that the ignorance of the Anglo-Indian Press in matters concerning the weal of Indians necessitates that the Native Press should be allowed full latitude in making loyal representations of the requirements of the Indians; and concludes with the remark that Government is well aware of the fact that Indians are conscious of its justice and munificence.

The Anglo-Indian Press and the relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
3rd November, 1906.

90. The Nasim-i-Agra of 3rd November, says that the Anglo-Indian Press is responsible for the ill-feeling between Hindus and Muhammadans, that the two communities have lived side by side for centuries, and the relations between them have for the most part been friendly, and the Anglo-Indian Press might leave them to settle their differences between themselves. The editor is of opinion that the ill-feeling between the two communities is not real and deep-rooted, and, were it not that the Hindus have co-operated with the Muhammadans, the foundation-stone of the Aligarh College would never have been laid, nor would Sir Saiyid Ahmad have been created a knight. He expresses a hope that the differences will not last long, and that the Anglo-Indian Press will find eventually that they have been baffled in alienating the sympathies of the two communities from one another.

Strained relations between the Anglo-Indian and the Native press.

TAFRIH,
7th November, 1906.

91. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of 7th November, while referring to the prosecution of the Punjabi (Lahore) under section 153 of the Indian Penal Code, says that the above section applies with far greater appropriateness to the Anglo-Indian papers, which try every now and then to widen the gulf between the Hindus and Muhammadans, and to alienate the feelings of the rulers from the ruled. The editor asks if Government would not be justified in instituting enquiries and trying to find out whether the Golden Bengal and the circular attributed to it by the Pioneer and the Englishman had any real existence or were the outcome of the overheated brain of the editors of these two journals. He further thinks that European officers have lost their confidence in the natives owing to the misrepresentations of the Anglo-Indian Press, which is ever ready to have proceedings instituted against native journalists, while the latter never think of retaliating. The editor refers to the hostile attitude of the Civil and Military Gazette, and is highly gratified to learn that the Indian Association (Lahore) has resolved at a meeting to obtain the sanction of the Punjab Government to institute proceedings against the Civil and Military Gazette under section 153, Indian Penal Code. He concludes with the remark that regard being had to the present unpleasant relations in the newspaper world, it is desirable that all editors should be treated alike irrespective of all distinctions of creed and colour.

TAFRIH,
7th November,
1906.

The Anglo-Indians and the strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

92. The Tafrih (Lucknow), says in its issue of the 7th November, that the conduct of the Superintendent of Police of Mymensingh, in refusing permission to the Hindus to parade their procession on the partition day, unless some one of their leaders made himself reponsible for keeping the peace, and rendered himself answerable for the peaceful conduct of the Muhammadans, is calculated to widen the gulf between the two communities. The editor remarks that European officers are only too ready to deny all knowledge of matters in which they are charged with inciting one party against another.

BARANASI,
16th October, 1906.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

93. The editor of the Baranasi (Benares) says in its issue of the 16th October that the progress of India depends on the co-operation of Hindus and Muhammadans, and points out that no good can result from the hollow professions of friendship that both communities are making at present. He concludes with the remark that each community should abstain from doing things calculated to injure the religious feelings of the other, as this alone can bring about a reconciliation and bridge the gulf existing between them.

KAYASTH HITKARI,
1st November,
1906.

Union between Hindus and Muhammadans.

94. The Káyasth Hitkári (Agra), of 1st November, says that the educated Hindus and Muhammadans are responsible for the strained relations between the two communities. The editor deprecates the spirit actuating them, and exhorts them to cultivate friendly feelings and to co-operate in opening shops and manufactories for the common good of the country. He concludes with the remark that the country cannot become great unless the Indians as a body take to commerce in preference to service.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th November, 1906.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

95. A correspondent in the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of 5th November, expresses his regret at the attitude adopted by the Hindus and Hindu newspapers in holding Sir Saiyid Ahmad and his successor the Nawab Mohsin-ul-mulk, responsible for sowing the seeds of discord and jealousy between the two great communities of India, and notes instances from history and from newspapers for the last fifty years, showing that the Muhammadans never took the offensive, and have kept up a defensive attitude for the protection of their rights and privileges. He points out that the endeavours of the Hindus made in 1867 against the use of Urdu and Persian in these provinces laid the foundation of disunion, and asks the Press to take up the matter and devise means calculated to bring about union between the Hindus and the Muhammadans.

KAYASTH HITKARI,
8th November,
1906.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

96. The editor of the Kayasth Hitkari (Agra), says in its issue of the 8th November that the Hindus have no reason to be jealous of Muhammadans at the reception accorded to the Muhammadan deputation, and exhorts both communities to unite and to interest themselves in commercial pursuits, which are calculated to ameliorate their condition much more than any number of appointments in Government service.

OUDH PUNCH,
8th November,
1906.

Patriotism in Muhammadans.

97. A correspondent in the Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 8th November, says that the agitation in Bengal has after all awakened the Muhammadans to a sense of their own responsbility towards their community, and led the Secretary of State to give his serious consideration to the rights and privileges of Indians who had so far no status whatever as a nation. The Congress, which has hitherto been looked down upon as seditious, is beginning to attract public attention, and the civilized world has become agitated with thoughts about India and the Indians. He then condemns the attitude of the trustees and managers of the Muhammadan College at Aligarh, who wish to pose with the public as representatives of the entire community, and manifest a spirit of indecent eagerness in endeavouring to direct the stream of charity to the interest of the College, irrespective of the evil consequences of such a course to the institutions profiting by them at present.

He points out how they demean themselves towards those who do not aid the Aligarh College, and illustrates his allegation by a reference to their systematic endeavours to detract from the merit and dignity of the Sultan of Turkey, at a time when the Pan-Islamic society is doing all that it can to cement the relations between the several Muhammadan powers in the world. He concludes with the remark that the Muhammadan College though the centre of Muhammadan aspirations in future, has not a spark of patriotism, and is sadly wanting in national and religious enthusiasm, which is extremly deplorable.

ANNAND,
6th November,
1906.

The selection of Muhammadans for appointments in the Superior Service.

98. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 6th November, says that the address presented by the Muhammadan deputation is beginning to produce practical results, as evidenced by the decision arrived at by the Local Government to confer one of the Inspectorships in the Education Department on a Muhammadan, irrespective of the claims of the Assistant Inspectors of schools now in the department. The editor says that the appointment of a Muhammadan Judge to the vacancy occurring on the retirement of Mr. Chandra Madhab Ghose from the Calcutta High Court is likewise under consideration, and adds that Government might as well confer all the appointments in the upper grades of the services on Muhammadans.

ZUL QUARNAIN
7th November

Pandit Jwala Prasad. District Magistrate of Etah.

99. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun) of the 7th November expresses its regret at the way in which Congress organs like the Indian People (Allahabad) and the Hindustani (Lucknow) try to evade an explanation of the charges laid at the door of Pandit Jwala Prasad, District Magistrate of Etah, and points out that the appraisement of his educational qualifications cannot be regarded as a refutation of the charge of racial prejudice against Muhammadans. The editor refers in passing to the tension of feeling between the Hindu Deputy Commissioner of Ludhiana and his Muhammadan subjects, and says that the Muhammadans there likewise felt compelled to give vent to their pent up feelings on the occasian of the recent visit of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab. The editor is of opinion that India is passing through a political crisis, and it is impossible at present to bridge over the gulf between Hindus and Muhammadans.

SULAIMANI
AKHBAR,
30th October, 1906.

The Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares) of the 30th October, likewise expresses its regret at the display of racial feeling in the discharge of official duties which has recently made itself felt in Bengal and at Ludhiana in the Punjab.

OUDH AKHBAR,
7th November,
1906.

Leather factories in Cawnpore.

100. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of 7th November, says that the export of hide to foreign countries has brought business in the two leather factories in Cawnpore to a stand-still, and apprehends that the price of leather will rise just the same as it has in the case of grain, which is always selling at an abnormally high rate. The editor concludes with the hope that the progress of the swadeshi movement may help in checking the export of leather to foreign countries.

HINDUSTANI,
7th November,
1906.

Industries and commerce of Cawnpore.

101. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of 7th November, while referring to the deputation of the Director-General of Agriculture to make inquiries into the industries and commerce of Cawnpore, suggests the desirability of these inquiries being made confidentially, so as to give merchants no room for complaint of publicity of accounts. The editor says that though the proprietors of the factories in Cawnpore are Indians, the managers and many other working hands are foreigners and regrets that though Indians are prepared to advance money to foreigners at moderate interest they are not yet ready to start their own factories.

OUDH AKHBAR.
8th November, 1906.

Hospital Assistants.

102. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 8th November, says that considering the prospects a Hospital Assistant has, the standard laid down at present is no doubt very severe. A student gifted with average intelligence takes about eight or ten years to pass the entrance examination, he then has to study for four consecutive years at the Medical School, and gets only Rs. 25 per mensem, if he comes out successful at the examination, with the prospect of getting a maximum salary of Rs. 70 after passing the various grade examinations. The editor thinks that his lot is very hard indeed, considering the large sum of money that has to be spent on his education, and the prospects people have in other departments of life.

GARHWALI,
for October 1906.

Cattle diseases in Garhwal.

103. The Garhwali (Dehra Dun) for October, invites the attention of Government to the immense loss of cattle due to certain diseases that have prevailed for some time in certain parts of Garhwal, and suggests that early steps should be taken to check the epidemic which is becoming virulent.

BHARAT JIWAN,
5th November, 1906.

The Pioneer and the Mahrattas.

104. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of 5th November, deprecates the suggestion of the Pioneer regarding the exclusion of the Mahratta Brahmans from civil appointments both in Native States and under Government, on the ground that such a step will tend to widen the gulf between the rulers and the ruled, and remarks that there is no reason why the sins of Mr. Tilak and his adherents should be visited on the whole community.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
8th November, 1906,

Pragwals and their servants.

105. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 8th November, says, with reference to the evil consequences of touting for pilgrims as practised by a class of Pragwals, that Railway authorities have from time to time withheld permission to certain ekkawalas to ply for hire within the station compound on account of their misconduct in touting for pilgrims on behalf of Pragwals. These ekkawalas have again succeeded in obtaining the permission that was refused to them for some time, and the result is that they are doing as brisk a business as before. The interference of these ekkawalas has led in some cases to breaches of the peace, and complaints and counter-complaints have been filed by and against them. In one case the conduct of an ekkawala in luring away other pilgrims led to a serious riot in which a number of people were hurt. Some times, poor innocent pilgrims receive injuries in the fight between rival Pragwals. It is therefore necessary that some inquiry should be made in the interest of the public into the conduct and antecedents and the number of armed retainers kept by each Pragwal. If some agency were employed to register the name, address and antecedents of servants employed for touting for pilgrims, there would be some check at least on the indiscriminate employment of criminals and ex-convicts by the Pragwals. There was a case in which a Pragwal's servant was convicted of attempting to poison pilgrims at Bindhachal, and he was suspected of complicity in other cases of poisoning at Allahabad and elsewhere.

OUDH AKHBAR,
10th November, 1906.

The commemoration of the reign of Akbar.

106. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 10th November says that a proposal has been made recently to commemorate the benign rule of Akbar the Great by holding an annual celebration, at which Hindus, Muhammadans, Parsees and in fact Indians of all creeds and denominations should be able to meet on one common platform, and eat and drink side by side with a view to promote a feeling of common fellowship. He points out that some of the bigoted Mahratta Brahmins who control the Hindu Education Fund, have permitted students belonging to their community to eat and drink freely with others while abroad, that Indian students in Japan likewise have broken through the trammels of the caste system in this respect, and that there seems no reason why the inhabitants of India should not be equally free while in their own country.

V.—LEGISLATION.

BHARAT JIWAN,
5th November, 1906.

The election for the Supreme Council.

107. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of 5th November, says that the public are much perplexed at hearing that Raj Kumar Tika Sahib of Nabha, a young chief who has just completed his education at the Atkinson Chiefs' College, is likely to succeed Nawab Fateh Ali Khan in the Imperial Council, and suggests the desirability of the election of Kunwar Harnam Singh or some other experienced chief to represent public interests there.

NASIM I-AGRA,
7th November, 1906.

Prevention of counterfeiting coins.

108. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 7th November, says with reference to an article in the India that the best way for the prevention of counterfeiting coins is to equalize the value of the coin with its quantity in gold or silver, as any attempt to commit the offence will be so much labour wasted on the part of the offender.

PRAYAG SAMACHAR,
7th October, 1906.

Cocaine.

109. The editor of the Prayág Samáchár (Allahabad), says in its issue of the 7th October, received on 8th November, that the amended bill of the Excise Act shows that Government wishes to encourage the sale of cocaine instead of taking measures for its repression.

JASUS,
7th November, 1906.

Appealable sentences.

110. The Jásus (Agra) of the 7th November, suggests the desirability of keeping the infliction of sentences in abeyance until the decision of appeal, and expresses a hope that early steps will be taken to modify the law on the subject.

VI.—Railway.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
28th October, 1906.

Outrage of a Hindu girl by a European guard near Moghal Sarai.

111. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of 28th October, says that the sentence of one month's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of one hundred rupees imposed on the European guard who outraged the modesty of a Hindu girl travelling with her mother on 6th September last from Benares to Howrah, is inadequate in the extreme; that Anglo-Indian officials do not mete out even-handed justice between Europeans and Indians, that the order of the District Magistrate directing payment of fifty rupees to the girl complainant from the fine, if realized, is a gross insult to the entire Hindu community and a stigma on British administration. He concludes with inviting the attention of Government to matters of this nature, and expresses a hope that steps will be taken to see that the feelings of Indians are not wounded in the manner they have been in this case.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
7th November, 1906.

Outrage of an Indian girl by a European guard.

112. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 7th November, while remarking on the inadequacy of sentence passed on the European guard who outraged the modesty of an Indian girl, while on her way from Benares to Howrah, asks if a similar sentence would be looked upon as meeting the requirements of the case, if the party aggrieved were a European and the offender an Indian. The editor remarks that it is instances of this sort that lead the Indian Press to think that the law administered to Englishmen is different from that laid down for the Indians.

RAHBAR,
28th October, 1906.

Grievances of railway employés on the Oudh and Rohilkhand railway.

113. A correspondent in the Rahbar of the 28th October, says that the native clerical staff on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway should get passes to travel in the intermediat class as on the East Indian Railway, that promotions should be given on some fixed system, that such of the employés as are not allowed to avail themselves of privilege leave, should get a month's pay instead, that they should get the same allowances for working on holidays as are given to Europeans, that the concessions made to European employés with a view to help them in training their children should, as far as practicable, be extended to natives, that uniforms should be supplied at regular intervals and in sufficient quantities, that the famine allowances should vary according to the requirements of each district, that relationship should not stand in the way of employment on the line, that greater discretion should be exercised in the infliction of punishments, that at least half the allowance should be given to the relieving staff while stationed at headquarters, that pensions should be given to persons rendered unfit for work owing to accidents, and to their nearest surviving dependents in case of death in the discharge of duty, that staff quarters should be provided for all employés, that there should be two assistant station masters at small stations, that reading rooms and similar other institutions should be opened, that better arrangements should be made for supplying medical aid and that Rs. 25, in case of clerks and Rs. 7 in case of the menial servants, should be the lowest salary per mensem.

ADVOCATE,
1st November, 1906.

Grievances of the Traffic staff on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

114. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 1st November, says that events following the departure of Mr. Pope and the succession of Mr. Jacob as Manager on the line, have proved the soundness of Mr. Pope's view that a reduction of expenditure would not be possible without affecting the efficiency of the management. The recent strikes on the several Indian Railways have led the manager to issue a circular advising the staff to represent their grievances which will receive his due consideration. The correspondent therefore takes the opportunity of inviting the attention of the Manager to such of them as require his early attention and says (1) that the accommodation at present is both insanitary and insufficient, and that house allowances should be invariably sanctioned to those of the staff who are entitled to free quarters but are not provided with them; (2) that the present scale of pay should be raised as living has lately become much more expensive; (3) that meritorious service, capability and educational qualifications should be the guiding principles in all promotions; (4) that the men employed on the line be given Sunday allowances, that they be given leave when necessary, and that the period of privilege leave be increased; (5) that intermediate class passes be given to the clerical staff irrespective of the pay they draw; (6) that the uniform supplied should be decent, and the system in force on the Bengal and North-Western Railway may be adopted with advantage; (7) that suitable accommodation be provided for relieving hands close to the Railway station, where they might stop while at headquarters; (8) that the goods contract be again given to Station-masters at a reasonable rate; (9) that better arrangements be made for the examination of patients, treatment of employes on the lines and for the supply of good medicine and that good in-door wards be built at the headquarter stations for their accommodation in case of serious illness; (10) that relieving allowances be continued as heretofore up to six months at a time at one station; (11) that Indians should receive the same consideration in examinations as Europeans and Eurasians, and (12) that permanent men at stations living with their families be not ordered without previous warning to relieve persons at other stations.

RAHBAR,
28th October, 1906.

Holidays and promotions in the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

115. A correspondent in the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th October, invites the attention of the District Traffic Superintendents to the hard lot of such of the clerks as have to attend the office on holidays, without any practical necessity. He also points out that promotions during the year have been given without any apparent reason only to a very limited number of clerks in the superior service, and concludes with a complaint against Lala Parbhu Dayal, establishment clerk, received on transfer from the office of the District Traffic Superintendent of Lucknow, and warns him that a reversion to old ways will entail exposure.

RAHBAR,
28th October, 1906.

Arrangements for the supply of ice on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

116. The editor of the Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 28th October, invites the attention of Jan Muhammad, contractor, to the rude behaviour of his servants travelling in trains for the supply of ice to passengers, and points out that some of them are in the habit of using false weights, which if not checked will compel him to bring the matter to the notice of the District Traffic Superintendents of Moradabad, Bareilly and Lucknow and to insist on the redress of the grievances. He concludes with the remark that Miyan Jan Muhammad will have to give up his contract if matters do not mend eventually.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR,
30th October 1906.

Catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

117. The Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares) of the 30th October, disapproves of the reversion to the old system of placing catering arrangements under the supervision of railway authorities, which is likely to bring in its train the complaints that existed previous to the present arrangement with contractors. The editor is surprised at the attitude adopted by the Rahbar (Moradabad) and feels that its suggestions if acted upon will lead to much public inconvenience.

OUDH PUNCH,
8th November, 1906.

Catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

118. A correspondent in the Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 8th November, suggests that the existing catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway are most conducive to public convenience, and that the railway authorities will do well not to interfere with them, unless they are prepared to attach a dining car to each passenger and mail train with ample provisions of all sorts.

ADVOCATE,
8th November, 1906.

The transfer of Pandit Acharit Ram, station master of Hapur.

119. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 8th November, says that a deputation, consisting of several respectable people, raises, zamindars and tradesmen, waited upon the Traffic Superintendent on the 21st September last to ask for the cancellation of the transfer of Pandit Acharit Ram, station-master of Hapur, that the prayers and protestations of the deputation having been curtly refused, the new hand took charge of the station from Pandit Acharit Ram and the next day to their utter surprise and dismay the merchants of the town found that what they apprehended was going to be realized. An intimation was received by them from the Railway Station, Hapur, that they were to load and unload in future at the Hapurganj siding and that goods will not be received at the railway station. This meant that merchants were to be compelled to pay an extra pie and a half per maund to the railway for loading and unloading at Hapurganj siding. It is to be remembered that too much greediness often means ultimately utter loss. If the Railway administration will have no regard for the wishes of the merchant community of Hapur, and if they are bent upon increasing their earnings by using compulsion and subjecting people to inconvenience, they may find in the end people giving up their loading and unloading transactions altogether at the Hapur station and betaking themselves to Ghaziabad station and elsewhere.

These lines are especially written with the view that perhaps the eyes of the powers that be may be opened to the gravity of the situation.

VII.—POST OFFICE.

ANNASIR,
8th October, 1906.

Picture post cards.

120. The Annasir (Budaun) of the 8th October, received on 8th November, takes exception to the attitude of the postal department in treating private coloured cards as bearing in case of the irregularity of writing anything except the address on the face of the cards. The editor thinks that the matter should have been duly notified for public information before treating such cards as bearing, and hopes that Government will not approve of such a course on the part of the Postal authorities.

JASUS,
28th October,
1906.

Removal of stamps from letters in transit.

121. A correspondent in the Jásus (Agra), of the 28th October, says that the recent order of the Inspector-General of Post offices forbidding the public to deface stamps on letters and other articles on pain of their being treated as bearing, leads unscrupulous postal employés to remove the stamps and to convert them to their private use. He concludes with the hope that the order will be cancelled and the old order of things again brought into existence.

UNION GAZETTE,
7th November, 1906.

The Manager of the Dead-letter Office.

122. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 7th November, says that it is very desirable that the blind Manager of the Dead-letter Office, who has appointed an agent to attend to his official duties be retired.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

ALIGARH MONTHLY,
for October, 1906.

The pardah system in India.

123. A correspondent in the Aligarh Monthly for October attributes the poverty of India, and most other existing evils to the pardah system which prevents women from relieving their husbands of a fair portion of their duties and responsibilities. It necessitates the maintenance of a double establishment owing to the difficulties men experience in taking their families with them when going abroad in search of employment, prevents the women from taking any active part in agricultural and commercial pursuits, from exercising due influence over the morals of their husbands, and thereby saving them from temptation, and from taking a part in public movements and consequently from introducing reforms calculated to help them in the economic management of their households.

The husbands on their side prefer living on their small earnings at home to going abroad and losing the pleasures of a home life, and so deterred from enterprise.

BARANASI,
23rd October, 1906.

Mendicants in India.

124. The Baranasi (Benares) of the 23rd October, received on 8th November, says that there are fifty-two lakhs of Sadhus and Sanyasis in India, living on public charity, and suggests that they should render themselves useful to society and earn their living by working for the community to which they belong, lest Government should consider it necessary to interfere in the matter.

ARYA MITRA,
1st November, 1906.

The Arya Samaj and the Christians.

125. A correspondent in the Árya Mitra (Agra), of 1st November, says that grand Christian meetings will be held towards the close of December next in Bareilly, and suggests that the Aryas likewise should arrange to hold their general meeting there, so as to enable missionaries coming from Europe and America to form their own views on the subject, and to discuss the Arya faith on their return from India.

AL BASHIR,
6th November, 1906.

The vituperation of the Arya Samajists.

126. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 6th November, says that the notoriety earned by the Arya Samajists for vituperation, is unprecedented in the annals of religion, and that they think that the propagation of their own faith will be considerably facilitated by their traducing other creeds. The editor quotes certain passages from the Satyárth Prakásh (2nd edition) of Swami Dayanand Saraswati, as illustrating the invective that the great Arya leader was himself in the habit of pouring indiscriminately on leaders of other creeds, and concludes with the remark that the Arya Samajists are no doubt the worthy disciples of a worthy master.

BHARAT JIWAN,
5th November, 1906.

The Harihar Kshetra fair.

127. A correspondent in the Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 5th November, complains of the adulteration with oil of the ghi, used by halwais (confectioners) for cooking food and preparing sweetmeats sold in the fair, and also of the practice of Aghoris (a sect of beggars) sitting in front of shops with filth on their bodies with a view to extort charity. He concludes with requesting the Government to see that these things are not allowed to recur at the next fair.

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

GARHWALI,
for October, 1906.

Vaccination.

128. The editor of the Garhwali (Dehra Dun) in its issue for October while admitting the usefulness of vaccination as a preventive of small-pox, points out that vaccinators as a rule force parents in villages to have their children vaccinated, and suggests that they should be stopped from doing so, as laid down in a recent decision of the Allahabad High Court.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
1st November, 1906.

The Vernacular Press.

129. The editor of the Riyaz-ul-Akhbar condemns in its issue of the 1st November the practice in vogue in the Native Press of detracting from each other's merit, and suggests the desirability of editors ceasing to indulge in such attacks on one another.

Mirza Qadyani and the Sultan of Turkey.

QULQUL, 29th October, 1906.

1. The editor of the Qulqul (Bijnor), resents in its issue of the 29th October, the disrespectful language used by Mirza Qadyani in speaking of the Sultan of Turkey, and deprecates his attempt to detract from the dignity and importance of the latter as a spiritual leader.

Quarantine in Turkey.

OUDH PUNCH, 15th November, 1906

2. The Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 15th November, contains a dialogue between the Turkish and the British Governments and the Muhammadans of India, wherein the correspondent dwells on the severity of the quarantine rules under which Indian pilgrims are placed in Turkey. He expresses a hope that the British Government will intercede on behalf of its Indian Muhammadan subjects, and endeavour to induce the Sultan to relax the severity of the measures now in force, and abolish the quarantine rules.

Turkey and Persia.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 8th November, 1906.

3. The Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Gorakhpur), of the 8th November, views with regret the tension of feeling between Persia and Turkey, and attributes it to the strategy of European Powers. The editor fears that if Turkey and Persia do not adapt their views to the requirements of the times serious consequences will ensue, and will jeopardise the happiness of Islam.

The Persians.

KANAUJ PUNCH, 8th November, 1906.

4. The Kanauj Punch (Kanauj), of the 8th November, says that the Persians have determined to boycott foreign products and to show every possible frugality at entertainments and other festivities and ceremonials.

A forecast of war.

MUSAFIR, 8th November, 1906.

5. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 8th November, says that the white nations of the West are all infatuated with the belief, that they are born to rule all over the world, that this craze is engendering a sense of hatred against them in the black nations of the East, and that a great war between the white and black nations will become inevitable within the next hundred years. The editor opines that the strife between the white man and the black man will become much keener than it now is, during the next ten years, and that the Russo-Japanese war is only the precursor of a Great War between the white and the black nations of the world, which will be inaugurated by America.

The impending war between Japan and America.

MUSAFIR, 8th November, 1906.

6. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 8th November, says that the increase in the tension of feeling between Japan and America seems to make war inevitable, and is becoming a source of considerable anxiety to Great Britain, where members of Parliament are beginning to think how the British Government can find a possible loophole to back out of the treaty with Japan, and save itself the horrors of a protracted war. The editor concludes with the remark that Japan will not lag behind where her honour is at stake, but war with America at the present moment is sure to lead her to destruction.

The Muhammadan deputation.

URDU-I-MUALLA, October, 1906.

7. The Urdu-i-Mualla (Aligarh), for October, says that the deputation may be pronounced a success, without the least hesitation, in view of the fact that it was the first political battle fought by the Muhammadans. The reply given by the Viceroy however does not call for special satisfaction or exultation. The encomiums heaped on Government, at the outset of the address are for the most part unmerited, and certain passages, tend to degenerate into irony. As a matter of fact, the phrase "people of India" means in Anglo-Indian phraseology, only such persons as concur with them in their views, or have no opinion whatever, and the expression "recognized political and commercial associations" means such bodies as consist of European members, or of those who concur with the views of the Anglo-Indians. The editor does not object to the representative character of the deputation, but is surprised at finding that those very Anglo-Indian papers and persons who have been decrying the Indian National Congress, as unworthy of recognition as a representative body, are loudest in setting up the claims of the Muhammadan deputation as such. He says that the recognition of an association or a deputation depends entirely on the policy of Government. He then says that Lord Minto, in spite of his professions of sympathy, has not even touched the questions of the Muhammadan University, of appointments in the superior service, and of Judgeships in the High Courts. His Lordship had expressed his sympathy with the Muhammadans on the question relating to the appointment of non-official members to the Councils, because it does not concern Europeans; and it appears that their number will be fixed. The editor, however, thinks that the proposal of the Muhammadans that Muhammadan members should be elected by their co-religionists only is not deserving of approval, and it will be well if His Excellency entertains the same view on the point, as the well-being of the Indians depends on the union of the several communities inhabiting the country. He goes on to say that in his opinion the ulterior object that Government has in view is that an increase in the number of Muhammadan members will considerably lessen the chance of opposition to Anglo-Indian members, to be expected from an increase of the Indian element when the Council is extended as proposed by Mr. Morley. These expectations cannot however be realized from educated Muhammadans. The editor concludes with the remark that the Muhammadan deputation is beginning to produce the results aimed at, and, if proper steps are taken to safeguard its interests, it may prove useful not only to the Muhammadans, but to the country as a whole.

BARANASI,
23rd October, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

8. The Barânâsi (Benares), of the 23rd October, received on the 8th November, while expressing its sympathy with the Muhammadan deputation, because its interests are identical with those of Hindus, says that the address is open to exception, in that the Muhammadans have pointedly asked for the proper representation of their community, that in matters civil and political there is no difference between the interests of Hindus and Muhammadans, and that it is not possible to think that the Hindus will have their own representation in councils, while the Muhammadans will have their own. Speaking of Lord Minto's reply it says that, while sympathizing with the aspirations and wishes of the Muhammadans, Lord Minto did not commit himself to the representation question raised by the deputation. On the contrary he expressed his inability to make the concession asked for, because so long as India continues under British rule, she can only be ruled according to the spirit of Western ideals.

AKHBAR-I-IMAMIA,
5th October, 1906.

The extension of the Legislative Councils and the Muhammadan deputation.

9. The editor of the Akhbari-Imamia (Lucknow), of the 5th October, received on the 15th November, while eulogizing that section of the Indian community whose endeavours have led Mr. John Morley to take the question of the extension of councils into consideration, deplores that the Shia Muhammadans have no one to help them in the protection of their rights. He then remarks that the self-styled representatives of the Muhammadan community who have memorialized the Viceroy did not even publish and distribute copies of the memorial for the information of their constituents before presenting the address to His Excellency. He says that, considering that the memorialists have not taken them into their confidence, the Shia Muhammadans can repose no reliance on them as representatives of the community. He suggests that, if the representatives are to be elected by the majority, the Shias will have no chance of having a member of their community elected, as the preponderating sect of Muhammadans will be able to defeat them in their aims, and elect members of its own community. He therefore strongly opposes the proposal of the memorialists regarding the election of Muhammadan representatives by a majority of Muhammadan voters, and points out that it is nothing short of madness to hope that the Sunni Muhammadans will take sufficient care to protect Shia interests. The editor then points out that the Sunnis of Lucknow have tried to avoid electing a certain popular Muhammadan, who is guided by principles of universal toleration, merely because he is a Shia, and that there is no reason to think that they will not be actuated by racial prejudices when the question of election to the councils comes under consideration. He suggests, that in case Muhammadan representatives are to be elected by a majority of Muhammadan voters, the Shia Muhammadans should memorialize Government and point out that they cannot depend safely on their Sunni brethren.

The Muhammadan deputation.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR, 8th November, 1906.

10. The Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Gorakhpur), of the 8th November, says, that the allegation, that the Muhammadan deputation has been a failure is incorrect, that the reply of the Viceroy breathes an air of sincerity and of goodwill towards the Muhammadan deputation. The fact, that Nawab Saiyid Muhammad held himself aloof from the deputation does not detract from its importance, notwithstanding the pride taken in him by the entire Muhammadan community. The memorialists who waited on the Viceroy are undoubted leaders of the community, and it is on this account that the Viceroy remarked in his reply that the deputation was representative in its character. The object of the deputation, as pointed out by Nawab Mohsin-ul-mulk, was to protect the interests of the Muhammadans, and not to encroach upon the rights of others. It had not the remotest idea of injuring the feelings of other communities. The editor says that those who decry the deputation in the face of these indisputable facts, can never be looked upon as the promoters of union amongst the several communities inhabiting India. He then points out, that the fact, that the late Mulla Abdul Qayum is held in esteem, while Nawab Mohsin-ul-mulk, Nawab Wikar-ul-mulk and the Nawab of Dacca, who are all decidedly far superior to him in every way are slandered, proves beyond all doubt, that a reputation for education can be secured by advocating the views of the Congress, and that no one will grudge this privilege to these much maligned gentlemen if they could likewise join the Congress movement. It is a matter for congratulation that the Muhammadan deputation did not ask Nawab Saiyid Muhammad to co-operate with them. The formation of a political deputation is highly desirable to check any misdirection of energies on the part of the young Muhammadans, who should be fully impressed with the necessity of self-isolation until a spirit of union and patriotism pervades the entire community. They have begun to look down upon the leaders of their community, and should be told that there is not the least intention to thwart them in their desire to serve their country, but that they should do so loyally, and make use of temperate language when demanding their rights and privileges.

The Muhammadans and Politics.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 14th November, 1906.

11. The editor of the Aligarh Institute Gazette supports, in its issue of the 14th November, the views expressed by a Muhammadan in the Pioneer, which have been endorsed by the editor of the Allahabad paper, and points out that it is a great mistake to think that the provisions forbidding Government servants from joining political movements, and attending such meetings apply to such associations as do not agitate against the policy of Government. He thinks that the presence of Government servants in the debates of such associations will materially help Government, as their experience will always enable them to exercise a wholesome influence on such bodies.

Mr. Justice Mukerji and the Membership of Law in the Viceregal Executive Council.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 15th November, 1906.

12. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 15th November, says that a vernacular paper of Calcutta remarks that the Government of India has recommended that when the office of Law Member in the Viceroy's Executive Council next falls vacant it should be offered to Mr. Justice Mukerji of the Calcutta High Court. The form of the report is somewhat unsatisfactory, but it is noteworthy that the same paper which publishes it, also announced the resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller, long before anything was known to the public about it. Further, it is no secret that Mr. Justice Mukerji himself has often declared that it is the Law Membership and not a Judgeship that is the goal of his ambition.

The Indian National Congress.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st November, 1906.

13. The Áwáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st November, says that a meeting of the members elected at the Benares session of the Congress will be held at Bombay on the 17th and 18th November, with a view to consider the means for placing the Congress on a permanent basis, and to devise means for the better and wider dissemination of its views all over the country. It is proposed to start standing committees in every important city, and to appoint a stipendiary Assistant Secretary and a missionary for each province. A number of National leaders will also be required to deliver lectures on the aims and objects of the Congress in large cities, all over India.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
10th November, 1906.

The Indian National Congress.

14. The Iwaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 10th November, says that the public mind is at present engrossed by thoughts relating to the introduction of reforms in the working of the National Congress, and points out the necessity of the scheme being planned and worked out with the greatest possible care, as a spirit of Liberalism is pervading throughout India, and the Anglo-Indian Press is busy in misrepresenting the action of Indians, and in trying to make out that racial differences are at present convulsing Indian society. The editor fears lest curtailment in the number of delegates as proposed by Mr. Ananda Charlu, C.I.E. (Madras), may afford an opportunity to the Anglo-Indians for further hostile criticism. They may go so far as to get up applications questioning the representative character of the few leading men selected from each city and thereby thwart the efforts of the promoters of the Congress. He approves Mr. Charlu's views, about the formation of representative associations in all important cities and towns throughout the country, but dissents from him regarding the election of foreigners to the Presidential chair, on the ground, that they cannot make the same sacrifices for India as the Indians, and considers that the office of President should be tenable at least for five years. He supports Mr. Charlu's proposal regarding the appointment of certain stipendiary officebearers, and expresses his appreciation of the suggestion made by Mr. Ganga Prasad Varma, regarding the creation of a permanent Congress fund by levying the sum of Rs. 10 per annum from a certain number of Indians, irrespective of their attendance at the annual Congress sessions. The questions regarding the curtailment of expenditure, the publication and distribution of Congress tracts, and the appointment of lecturing missionaries for the dissemination of Congress views, have likewise his fullest sympathy.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
16th November, 1906.

The Indian National Congress and the Muhammadans.

15. A correspondent in the Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 16th November, says that the Muhammadans as a body have degenerated considerably ever since certain members of their community have set themselves up in open opposition to the Congress, which began from Aligarh and has since spread all over the country. He remarks that no success can attend Muhammadan enterprise without the co-operation of the Hindus, nor can the former command the respect of Englishmen, who are not actuated by party feeling in meting out justice and appreciating merit and learning. The bulk of the Muhammadans are converts born in the country, and it is very much to be regretted that they still cannot co-operate with the Hindus. They must bear in mind that the community as a whole cannot benefit by their securing a few more appointments in Government service than they hold at present. He concludes with expressing a hope that a day will come when the Muhammadans will regret the political schism now created and will join the Indian National Congress, which represents the combined interests of the several communities inhabiting India. He further advises the two communities to forget the past and to avoid all reference to subjects calculated to offend each other's racial dignity.

OUDH AKHBAR,
17th November, 1906.

The Indian National Congress.

16. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 17th November, says that the idea of forming political associations all over India, which originated in the Punjab, has been approved of by the Bengalis, and the leaders of public opinion in other provinces. The editor says that these associations will look after the political needs of the people at large, and that they will supervise education, and take steps to promote local arts and industries. He then remarks that the Punjabis have set a noble example to the other communities, by erecting a separate Congress building of their own, and says that the inhabitants of the United Provinces though magnanimous, lack perseverance and that it is on this account that most of their projects remain incomplete. He then eulogizes the conduct of Lala Lajpat Rai, Pandit Rambhaj Datt, Sarladevi and Maulana Chashti for their sympathy and patriotism, and concludes with the hope that the benign influence of the British Government will raise the Indians to the position of the foremost nations of the world, and make her the cynosure of the civilized world.

MUSAFIR,
8th November, 1906.

Proposed prosecution of the Tribune.

17. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 8th November, regrets to learn that the Punjab Government is contemplating the prosecution of the Tribune, in respect of its note about the death of a punkha coolie in Jullundhar. The editor says, that the line of action adopted by the Punjab Government savours of Fullerism, and points out that sedition in the East has always been due to the high-handed measures adopted by Government, and not to the attitude of newspapers.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
8th November, 1906.

Recruitment for colonization.

18. A correspondent in the Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 8th November, complains of the latitude allowed to the agency for recruiting colonists at Etawah, and charges its members with impressing men and women against their wishes and the consent of their guardians, as the fees of five rupees per head is too strong a a temptation for them to resist. The editor remarks that their high-handedness has spread consternation amongst the women in Etawah.

MOHINI,
9th November, 1906.

The Mahratta Brahmins of India.

19. The Mohini (Kanauj) of the 9th November, deprecates the conduct of the Pioneer, in recommending the exclusion of the Mahratta Brahmins as a community from Government service, on the ground that Mr. Tilak and certain other Mahratta leaders are extremists. The editor hopes that the Government will not be so unjust as to visit individual sins on an entire community.

ADVOCATE,
11th November, 1906.

The Pioneer and the Mahratta Brahmins of India.

20. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow) of the 11th November says, with reference to the remarks of the Pioneer on the characteristic traits of the Mahratta Brahmin, that first and foremost is evidently the Kolhapur case, which it is feared will take long to be settled, since the Times of India has thrown in its lot with the side of the State, and is most violently attacking the Brahmins. "When the chiefs of true Mahratta States are able to extend to them (the Brahmins) the hand of reconciliation it would be wisdom itself for the leaders of both the parties to throw off their differences for the single reason, if none other, that the Anglo-Indian Press wants to augment them.

The second thing that has disturbed the calm of the learned editor of the Pioneer is evidently the unwarranted statement that appeared in the Chitchiksak and which has been so much commented upon, chiefly by Nawab Salimullah. What Mr. Gokhale is alleged to have said closely resembles the Pioneer's statement that "the clamours for representative Government affords them a hope of attaining their former predominance." He then says that it requires no argument to prove the stupendous grossness of this statement, and the Pioneer cannot pretend to be ignorant of the fact that the Mahratta Brahmin does not clamour for representative Government for the Mahrattas alone, nor can the Pioneer believe that Tilak will have his own way in the midst of an assembly consisting of Mehta and Wacha, Banerji and Ghose, Dutt and Rasul, Agha Khan and Mehdi Ali, Malviya and Lajpat Rai.

He then says, that the Pioneer has another count against the Mahratta Brahmin. Mr. Khaparde does not belong to Poona, but coming in the category of the accused he may well be included among the "scribes of Poona" who are "not capable of forming a just opinion." And Mr. Khaparde has had the boldness to declare what value to set, on the "sympathy" of the Anglo-Indian Press with the Congress movement. He points out that the whole of the article is full of abuse, every one knows that "there had been a religious revival among the Mahrattas" before the birth of Sivaji, and that "this movement produced remarkable men, subsequently regarded as saints." This religious revival far from being the growth of impatience at the arrogance of the Brahmins, had for its aims "the protection of kine and the Brahmins," that Sivaji himself was proud of the title of the "Protector of the kine and the Brahmins," and that the very saints who have at last been recognized by the Pioneer as remarkable men were themselves remarkable for the deep reverence for the Brahmin.

Then again, there is the reference to the "attacks upon the worthy and deserving Probhu caste," a disguised attempt to widen the gulf between the Probhu and the Brahmin. He asks that, if the defeat given to the Probhus by the Brahmins was the result of an unfair attack, what name should be given to the means adopted by the political parties in England to put down and vanquish one another.

The Pioneer pronounces this final judgment on the Mahratta Brahmin, because its editor is gradually becoming confident that he enjoys an immunity from the provisions of section 153, Indian Penal Code. He surely knew that he was deliberately insulting an important class of His Majesty's subjects. He knew that his article would raise a storm of indignation, but he had no reason to care for it. He was quite certain that the class of readers that he wanted to influence—all Europeans, who rule British territory and guide a considerable portion of the policy of the Native States—had no time to read Indian papers, in which the storm against him would be raised. The correspondent asks the Pioneer in the name of fairness to mention some of the historical proofs which lead to the conclusion that the Mahratta Brahmin is by nature disloyal.

ANAND,
13th November, 1906.

The Governor of Ceylon.

21. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 13th November, says that the collusion of the Governor of Ceylon with the Pearl Fishery Company, which has been duly noticed in the Pioneer has been a disgrace to all public sevants alike.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

OUDH AKHBAR,
15th November, 1906.

Afghanistan.

22. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 15th November, after referring to the stability of Kabul, for which credit is due to the late Amir Abdul Rahman Khan, and to the reforms introduced by the present Amir, says that his ensuing visit is calculated to make the relations between the Amir of Kabul and the Government of India more amicable, and expresses a hope that it will engender a greater respect for the friendship of Great Britain in the Afghans in general.

OUDH AKHBAR,
16th November, 1906.

The ensuing Agra Darbar.

23. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 16th November, says that only titled Talukdars of Oudh will be invited to the ensuing Agra Darbar to be held in honour of the visit of the Amir of Kabul. He then refers to the universal complaint that the Anglo-Indian Press is doing all that it can to widen the gulf between the Hindus and the Muhammadans, and expresses a hope that Government will be able to show due courtesy to the Talukdars of Oudh, and to avoid a repetition of the treatment accorded to them at the Coronation Darbar when they had to sit on benches, though they were given chairs when Queen Victoria assumed the title of Empress.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
8th November, 1906.

Rampur.

24. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 8th November, says that the pamphlets referring to Shaikh Abdul Ghafur were written with the object of having him turned out of the State in disgrace, and the device succeeded eventually. The pamphlet against His Highness the Nawab of Rampur, that has appeared recently is, like those against the minister, the work of some one having a thorough knowledge of the ins and outs of the State, and is attributed by some to Maulvi Abdul Ghafur's party, by others to Mansab Ali's heirs, and by certain others again to Zia-ul-Haq's party. It discloses the existing state of affairs at Rampur, and enters into a discussion of the circumstances that led to the dismissal of Maulvi Abdul Ghafur and the death of Mansab Ali. The motive actuating their author seems to be a desire to vindicate the conduct of Maulvi Abdul Ghafur, and to unravel the mystery in which the death of Mansab Ali is involved.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
8th November, 1906.

Zia-ul-Haq's case.

25. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 8th November, is surprised to find that Abdul Ghafur left India on the pretext of going on a Haj to Mecca in order to avoid the painful necessity of coming in as a witness for defence, after having spent thousands of rupees in having him arrested in connection with the pamphlets that were directed against him. The editor asks if such a thing would be allowed if he were in office as minister.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
11th November, 1906.

Shaikh Zia-ul-Haq.

26. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 11th November, says that no pity will be felt for the man Zia-ul-Haq, who has been sentenced by the District Magistrate of Moradabad to imprisonment for two years and a fine of Rs. 1,000 on a charge of defaming an official of the Rampur State. Zia-ul-Haq is a black mailer and calumniator of the worst type. has now met his deserts and it is likely that he will come out, after two years of life in prison, a sadder and a wiser man: for the art of the blackmailer does not always pay.

NIZAM-UL-MULK, 8th November, 1906.

Prosecution and conviction of Muti Ahmad and Haidar Husain, Vakils of Rampur.

27. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 8th November, points out that the proceedings against Muti Ahmad and Haidar Husain, Vakils of Rampur, who were charged with aiding Mansab Ali in taking bribes were prolonged unnecessarily, and that judgment in their case was reserved without any ostensible excuse until the close of the case against Zia-ul-Haq; that the action of the Magistrate in thus putting off the case was against standing orders, that the offence in section 213 of the Indian Penal Code with which the accused were charged is bailable, but there seems no reason why they were not admitted to bail, on application being made to that effect, and that the complainants who gave the bribes alleged to have been given to Mansab Ali have rendered themselves liable to prosecution under section 214, I. P. C., but no action has been taken against any one of them. The editor considers that the procedure was open to serious objection, and in contravention of the views of Government, and thinks that no attention is paid to these matters in Rampur.

HINDOSTHAN, 16th November, 1906.

The Nizam's forces at Hyderabad.

28. A correspondent in the Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of the 16th November, says that large reductions are being made at present in the Nizam's forces at Hyderabad, and then he points out that about five hundred Arabs, who have come under reduction, presented themselves on the 5th November last at the office of Captain Wazirjang the Nazim of Hyderabad, and demanded their arrears of pay for three months. An inquiry into the origin of this demonstration disclosed that the ring-leaders were the men of Sultan Niwazjang, who commanded the mob to retreat after assuring himself that the men will be paid on the day following. The editor suggests that it is highly desirable to improve the existing state of affairs, as it is very much to be feared that such demonstrations may some day assume unwieldy dimensions and cause incalculable harm.

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

QULQUL, 29th October, 1906.

Charge of criminal breach of trust against the editor of the Qulqul.

29. The Qulqul (Bijnor), of the 29th October, says that the trial of Qazi Nazar Husain (its editor) has concluded, and the Qazi has got off with a fine of one hundred rupees. The editor remarks that the result cannot be looked upon as unexpected, in a case instituted by the District Magistrate, and prosecuted at Government cost. He adds in conclusion that he and his friends made a great mistake in allowing the case to proceed in the Bijnor district, but hopes that the law will help him in getting justice from higher tribunals.

ADVOCATE, 4th November, 1906.

A Muhammadan Judge for the Calcutta High Court.

30. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th November, says, that the question of appointing a Muhammadan Judge to the Calcutta High Court on the retirement of Sir Chandra Madhab Ghose is well advanced, and it is hoped that some Muhammadan lawyer of Bengal or elsewhere will get the appointment. The editor expresses a hope that the best Muhammadan will be selected, and does not see any reason why the choice should be confined to barristers only, and why some vakil of good repute and practice or some lawyer in the service, if satisfying the requirements, should not be selected for the vacancy. He concludes with expressing his surprise at seeing that the name of Mr. Muhammad Rafiq of these Provinces has not been suggested.

ANAND, 13th November, 1906.

Mr. Scott versus Beni Madhab.

31. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 13th November, says that much excitement prevails in Lucknow owing to the conviction of one Beni Madhab charged with abusing Mr. Scott, Assistant Magistrate, while the cart of the latter passed brushing against Beni Madhab's ekka within Cantonment limits. Beni Madhab pleaded that the abusive language, he used was addressed to the ekka-driver, and not meant for Mr. Scott. The editor remarks that the conviction has marred the life-long career of the boy, and the offence might have been overlooked as one of a trivial nature.

ADVOCATE,
11th November,
1906.

Ceylon Pearl Fishery.

32. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 11th November, says that the worst suspicions have been confirmed in spite of protest. The declaration of dividends of 17 per cent. ordinary, and 15 deferred, to the shareholders of the Ceylon Pearl Fishery Company shows how Sir West Ridgway, ex-Governor of Ceylon, made use of official information to secure his private ends. The greatest apologist of British ex-officials, the Pioneer, has not a word to say in favour of Sir W. Ridgway's part played in the acquirement of the lease by this Company. Referring to the remarks of its Allahabad contemporary it says that better condemnation of the ex-Governor of Ceylon could not be worded by his worst enemy.

Put in the mildest terms the connection of Sir West Ridgway with the Company is unfortunate. Of all men he ought to have been most capable of giving sound advice to the colony and to the Imperial Government, and as a pension-drawing servant of the Crown it was his duty to do so. But he made performance of that duty impossible by taking a financial share in a private concern, the interests of which naturally conflicted with those of Ceylon, and no explanations can remove the feeling that he failed to use the knowledge he gained as Governor in the way that is most worthy of British public service.

Gambling dens in Benares.

34. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 12th November, while referring to the arrest of certain gamblers at the common gaming-houses maintained by Mahadeo Ahir and Sham Lal Sonar of Daranagar (Benares) gives due credit to the City Kotwal for his interest in this direction, and points out that there are a number of other permanent common gaming-houses which require his attention. He concludes with suggesting the desirability of his exercising due caution while proceeding in cases of this nature.

The Durgakund tank.

35. The Báránasi (Benares), of the 23rd October, received on 8th November, invites the attention of the local authorities to the inadequate fencing round the Durgakund tank, relates how Babu Banarsi Lal's trap and his fine waler Chemside went into the tank a few days back, and suggests that high iron railings should be put up all round the tank to prevent future accidents.

ADVOCATE,
4th November,
1906.

Road watering in Lucknow.

37. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th November, says that the road watering in Lucknow is simply disgraceful and highly discreditable to the Municipal Administration, and that one cannot walk even on the roads supposed to be watered every morning and evening without inhaling a certain amount of dust. He attributes this to lack of supervision, and suggests the desirability of introducing the system of watering the roads direct from pipes with the help of hoses, or where this is not possible, by bullock or even by hand-carts. He does not see any reason, why hoses should not be purchased, and points out that such of the roads as have heavy traffic, should be watered during the business hours of the day, as in Calcutta, instead of being watered only in the mornings and evenings. He adds that if hoses cannot be had, the Municipality should purchase bullock carts for watering the roads, and dispense with the services of bhishtis, who are not full-time servants of the Board, and whose services are much needed by the poorer classes of Muhammadans, who are put to considerable inconvenience owing to the fact that the wages of water-carriers have become almost doubled. He concludes with the remark that all roads on which heavy traffic has to be carried on should be well watered, and makes particular mention of the Canning street and the road passing from the City vid Rikabganj to the Railway station.

ANAND,

38. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 13th November, invites the attention of the local municipal authorities to the insanitary condition of the gutter passing from the Gama Bridge to Husainabad (Lucknow), and points out the necessity of the accumulated silt being taken out with a view to enable the dirty water of the locality to run down its course without accumulating.

INDIAN PEOPLE,

Roads in Aligarh.

39. A correspondent in the Indian People (Allahabad) of the 11th November complains of the bad condition of the roads in Aligarh, and while referring to the railway road in particular, invites the attention of the member of the ward to the matter.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
15th November, 1906.

Employes in Municipal Boards.

40. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 15th November invites the attention of Government to the deplorable lot of employés under the control of the Municipal Boards, whose services are not pensionable, while those of employés in the District Boards are. The editor points out that the duties of the former are more onerous than those of the latter, and it seems very hard that, after toiling all their lives in the interests of the department to which they belong, they should have nothing to fall back upon at the close of their official career. He then refers to certain individual cases in the Agra Municipality, and says that one of these has been deprived of the pension he has enjoyed for the last ten years, and the other has been retired without even a bonus after thirty-five years' active service.

(e).—Education.

ADVOCATE,
4th November, 1906.

The Three New Inspectorships in the Education Department.

41. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 4th November, does not approve of the view that a Deputy Collector will make a better Inspector than any man however intelligent he may be, and protests against selection from another department, on the ground that, however intelligent a man may be, he will take some time to know the ins and outs of the department. He points out that hitherto all the Inspectors selected have been either Professors or Inspectors, that all with the exception of Mr. Housden have been successful, and their success is due to the fact that they have to deal chiefly with the English schools, where the boys are the sons of the gentry and the nobility, and of the middle class people, on whom the future hopes of India depend, and who are never compelled to work at the risk of their health. Their duties differ very much from those of the Assistant Inspectors who have to deal chiefly with village schools, where one comes in contact with the lowest classes of civilized people, where boys have to be compelled to work and even the teachers are semi-educated. He concludes with the remark that Assistant Inspectors and Deputy Inspectors may be ever so well versed in the vernaculars, but cannot do so well as the Head-masters, in English and in the subjects taught in English. It is therefore desirable that the selection of the Inspectors should be confined to the grades of Provincial Head-Masters among whom many experienced Indians, Europeans and Eurasians can be found.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
8th November, 1906.

High education.

42. The editor of the Kanauj Punch (Kanauj), says in its issue of the 8th November, that the present needs of the country demand that the Indians should after receiving a certain amount of education that will be sufficient for the purpose, take to technical education. He is of opinion that high education is detrimental to the material prosperity of the people, and should be discouraged amongst the masses.

BHARAT JIWAN,

Education in the United Provinces.

43. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of the 12th November, while reviewing the last annual report of Mr. Lewis, Director of Public Instruction in the United Provinces, says that an insufficiency of funds is hampering the spread of Primary education in the masses, and that the position of teachers in the primary schools has not so far undergone any material change for the better. The editor says that Mr. Lewis himself admits that the United Provinces are far behind others in matters of education, and concludes with the hope that Government will take steps to ensure the spread of education by the appointment of a better and well-paid staff of teachers, and do all it can to bring these Provinces on a level with others in matters relating to Education.

AGRA AKHBAR,

44. A correspondent in the Agra Akhbar of the 14th November, exhorts Maulana Muhammad Habib-ul-Suleman, Secretary of the Association for the improvement of Urdu to resuscitate the Scientific Society organized by Sir Saiyid Ahmad, and expresses a hope that the step if taken will materially promote the cause of the Urdu vernacular. He remarks in conclusion that the Government had a political aim in view in setting up Hindi as a rival to Urdu, and points out that this policy has tended to widen the gulf between the Hindus and the Muhammadans.

45. A correspondent in the Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 14th November, remarks that the Kakori English School is in a very unsatisfactory condition. He then says that the Urdu school there consists of one hundred students, and that an increase of its staff is very necessary. In conclusion he suggests that the matter should be inquired into by the Deputy Inspector of Schools, and the school then raised to the Middle Class standard.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
15th November,
1906.

Arabic and the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College at Aligarh.

46. The Kanauj Punch of the 15th November, condemns the hostile attitude of the Aligarh College towards Arabic as a classical language, and exults at the defeat the Trustees have sustained by the appointment of a German Professor, at State expense, which has prevented them from excluding it from their curriculum of studies. The editor says that the followers of Sir Saiyid Ahmad have a bad influence.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
15th November,
1906.

The proposed appointment of a German professor of Arabic in the United Provinces.

47. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 15th November, says that there is a proposal, it hears on reliable authority, to appoint a German professor of Arabic in these Provinces on an initial salary of Rs. 750 a month rising to Rs. 1,000. He will be a Government servant, but his services will be lent to the Aligarh College. If such a proposal has been made it is a discreditable job in more ways than one. In the Indian Educational Service no Englishman is appointed on more than Rs. 500 a month, while no Indian Maulvi obtains more than Rs. 300 a month, and very few get as much as Rs. 200. In the next place, there is no precedent for the service of such a professor paid by the Government being lent to a private college immediately on his appointment. When there was a proposal for appointing a European professor of Sanskrit in the Calcutta Presidency College there was an indignant and general protest, and the idea was dropped. In the present instance the Muhammadan community ought to resent this proposal. It is bound to give grave offence to Muhammadan teachers of Arabic. The finest Arabic scholars in the world are Muhammadans, and the mere suggestion that a German scholar of Arabic can be superior to a learned Muhammadan is an insult. It is just as outrageous as that any European Sanskrit scholar can compare with a great Hindu Sanskrit scholar. So far as we are aware a European professor of Arabic was not asked for by the Aligarh College, and the authorities of that college must be very doubtful whether such a professor will be of any use to them.

Famine prices of grain.

48. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 14th November, says that the prevalence of famine prices in Oudh and neighbouring districts in spite of good kharif crops has been a source of considerable depression amongst the public in general and the poorer classes in particular. The editor attributes this to the export of grain in large quantities, and says that it is strange indeed that export of grain is not regarded as the cause of famine.

Poverty of India.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 1st November, 1906.

49. The Áwáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st November, says that the poverty of India is agitating the public mind, that it has led to an increase of crime and to the moral and commercial degeneration of the country, and expresses a hope that a better future is not far distant.

Self-improvement amongst Muhammadans.

SHAHNA-I-HIND, 8th November, 1906.

50. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 8th November, invites the attention of the Muhammadans to the reply given by His Excellency the Governor of Madras to certain Muhammadans who waited on His Excellency, and exhorts them to devote themselves heart and soul in raising their educational qualifications, and to cease to depend on favouritism. The editor suggests that the manner in which the Viceroy passed over certain points in their address without even touching them leads to a similar inference.

Self-improvement in India.

SHAHNA-I-HIND, 8th November, 1906.

51. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 8th November, invites the attention of the Indians to the boycott of American products by the Chinese, brought about by the maltreatment of their labourers by the Americans, and exhorts them to exert themselves for the good of their country and their nation, instead of depending on Government even in matters where its interference is unnecessary or undesirable. The editor suggests that the failure of measures initiated by Government for the prevention of the plague is an instance in point.

The present situation of India.

TAFRIH, 14th November, 1906.

52. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 14th November, says that the poverty of India is due mainly to the fact that the steam-engines of Europe have supplanted manual labour in India. Here unlike Europe the duty of disposing of manufactures devolves on the manufacturer, and the working capital is very small owing to want of co-operation, and moreover the manufactures here are entirely in the hands of illiterate men. The editor points out that the condition of India cannot be improved unless the Indians as a body determine to use only indigenous products, and the Government undertakes to patronize the swadeshi movement.

Indians and Anglo-Indians.

BARANASI, 16th October, 1906.

53. The Báránasi (Benares), of the 16th October, received on 8th November, says that every attempt should be made to allay the tension of feeling between Indians and Anglo-Indians, that the Indians should in their dealings with Anglo-Indians bear in mind the benefits they have received, and that if they show their gratitude it is but natural that the Anglo-Indians will receive them cordially.

Strained relations between Indians and Europeans.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 11th November, 1906.

54. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 11th November, while quoting the opinion of certain of its contemporaries in support of its view, says that the conceit of the Europeans, and certain racial differences have created a gulf between them and the Indians, which cannot be bridged. The editor remarks that Europeans look upon Indians with the utmost contempt, no matter what their virtues may be and is of opinion that the brute creation have greater sympathy for one another than the Europeans have for the Indians.

The Prestige of European officers.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 12th November, 1906.

55. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad) of the 12th November, reproduces an article from the Pioneer, saying that the Europeans do not inspire the same degree of respect as they once did, because they are beginning to enter into matrimonial alliances with Indians and spend much of their time in the pursuit of pleasure, and because the Hindus predominate in Government offices.

Native versus Feringhi.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 15th November, 1906.

56. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 15th November, says that Empire, the new evening paper of Cacutta, while publishing some translations from a particularly virulent vernacular newspaper called Sandhya, notes that that paper uses invariably the word Feranghi to designate Englishmen or Europeans. This word, Empire says, is malevolent and insulting, and is probably a retort for the word 'native' so heedlessly used by Anglo-Indian papers and Europeans in this country. It might be added that some Anglo-Indian papers delight in spelling the word Babu with a small

'b,' but the word has almost disappeared from the Bengal Press, the word Srijut or Srijukta being substituted. The word Feringhi now means a Eurasian, but originally it meant all Europeans and is a corruption of the word 'Frank.' The word was first used by Muhammadans when they were rulers of the country, and was certainly a contemptuous word. If this word were to be used now by way of retort to the contemptuous word 'native' when the word 'Indian' would not be offensive and would be correct, we should not object to it at all. The only reason why the example of Sandhya is not yet largely followed is, that we have yet some self-respect left, and do not feel that abuse is always the best answer for abuse. But Anglo-Indian papers and Anglo-Indians must be more careful in future in the choice of their words.

BARANASI,
16th October, 1906.

The partition of Bengal.

57. The Báránasi (Benares), of the 16th October, received on 8th November, says that from what has been said regarding the partition of Bengal, it appears that so large an administration required partition on the ground of administrative efficiency. But the question now is, that instead of wounding the feelings of 45,000,000 of the King-Emperor's subjects, and making them disconsolate, it is highly desirable on the part of Mr. Morley to adopt some other scheme which, without impairing the administrative efficiency, will give peace to a very large number of the loyal subjects of the King-Emperor, and instead of two independent provinces, each ruled by officials directly dependent on Simla, it might be possible to create one great province, with two sub-divisions, ruled by a non-official Governor and a Council with two Lieutenant-Governors under him.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
4th November, 1906.

The partition of Bengal.

58. The Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 4th November, says on the authority of the Sanjiwani (Calcutta), that the Government of India intends to form a Committee shortly with a view to ascertain the effect and the impression produced by the partition of Bengal, in order to set the partition aside in case it has led to public annoyance and dissatisfaction. The Secretary of State has so far been assured that the excitement caused by the partition is subsiding rapidly, and that the Bengalis are becoming reconciled to their lot. The demonstrations of the 16th October last give however unmistakable proofs of the emphatic disapprobation of the Bengalis, and leave no room for doubting that they have become deeply affected by the partition of Bengal. It is then pointed out that the Prime Minister likewise has given the assurance that Government will no doubt cancel the partition if it is proved to be a failure instead of being appreciated as a blessing.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
4th November, 1906.

The partition of Bengal.

59. The Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 4th November, says that the Muhammadans of Mymensingh, assembled at a meeting held ostensibly to consider certain educational questions, resented the conduct of Munshi Himayat-ud-din, pleader of Barisal in attempting to appraise the partition of Bengal in the course of his opening speech, and expressed their unanimous protest against the partition. The opposition and indignation of the audience became so pronounced that the meeting had to be adjourned to the discomfiture of the partitionists.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
15th November,
1906.

The partition of Bengal.

60. The Kanauj Punch, of the 15th November, says that the Bengalis have met with repeated rebuffs in their attempts to have the partition of Bengal set aside by the Secretary of State, who has said very distinctly that the question may be looked upon as having been settled finally. They are now proposing in consultation with Mr. Gokhale to memorialize Mr. Morley and to ask for a modification of the decision arrived at in connection with the partition. The editor says that in view of the opinion expressed by Mr. Morley, while replying to a question put by Mr. Rees on the subject, it seems highly desirable that the Bengalis should cease to agitate the matter any further.

The editor further remarks that the Bengalis are making a great mistake in trying to make out that the Muhammadans as a community are at one with them in condemning the partition, and points out that they will be much better off if they disregard the Muhammadans altogether, and take their stand on their own strength.

61. The Baranasi (Benares), of the 23rd October, received on 8th November, says that every one is in favour of the use of indigenous articles, and that this is not possible without rejecting foreign articles of the same description, but the boycott of foreign products should not be denounced in an aggressive spirit. The editor suggests that those who burnt or otherwise destroyed foreign articles in their possession, would have proved themselves true promoters of the swadeshi movement, if they had imitated the example of Raja Peari Mohan Mukerji, by giving those things to the poor for their use. He concludes with the remark that enthusiastic Indians should not forget the benefits that have been conferred on them by Anglo-Indians, and suggests that Bengal ought to have a capitalist to import Madras salt which could be sold cheaper than the Liverpool salt.

The swadeshi movement.

BARANASI,
23rd October, 1906.

62. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 8th November, is highly gratified to learn that vows were made at the mass meeting held at Benares to renounce the use of foreign sugar and adulterated ghi, the use of which the editor says is contrary to the precepts of Hindu religion. He exhorts the Indians to encourage indigenous products, and advises them to follow the example of the residents of Muttra, where both Hindus and Muhammadans have given up the use of foreign products and manufactures.

The swadeshi movement.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
8th November, 1906.

63. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th November, is gratified at reporting that the Agra public have formed a club to be called the Agra National Club with a view to promote indigenous arts and manufactures. Babu Gyan Singh Vaidya, the Secretary of the club, is deeply interested in the association, which has undertaken to deliver speeches and lectures in various parts of the city, in order to promote swadeshi interests. A mass meeting attended by thousands of men was held in the Panchaiti Dharamsala at Raja-ki-Mandi (Agra), and it was resolved to use swadeshi products to the exclusion of all foreign commodities.

ARYA MITRA.
8th November, 1906.

64. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 13th November reports, that about twelve swadeshi meetings have been held in different quarters of Lucknow, and that the movement is taking a firm root there. The Bande Matram and other religious hymns are almost invariably recited at these meetings, and the public are taking a deep interest in promoting swadeshi interests.

The swadeshi movement.

ANAND,
13th November, 1906.

65. The Baranasi (Benares) of the 13th November says that the Government pensioners residing at Benares who have held themselves aloof from the swadeshi movement on the ground that it is opposed to the policy of Government, should bear in mind that they are paid by the country, and their conduct is one of extreme ingratitude. He exhorts them to give the matter their due consideration and to save themselves from obloquy.

The Swadeshi movement.

BARANASI,
13th November, 1906.

66. The Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 15th November, says that a grand meeting consisting of over 1,200 Hindus and Muhammadans was held at the house of Rai Din Dayal at Ashrafabad (Lucknow) on the 28th of October last. The proceedings commenced with the recitation of the national song Bande Matram, which was followed by a dialogue between two boys. This pointed out the advantages of the swadeshi movement and held up the stylish gentleman of to-day to ridicule. Of the several speakers Munshi Saiyid Ali and Babu Sudhirkumar Banerji are deserving of particular mention. The former expressed his regret at the attitude adopted by the Muhammadans in holding themselves aloof from the swadeshi movement, which he proved conclusively is far more advantageous to the Muhammadans than to the Hindus. The latter expressed his gratification at the progress that the movement is making in the Upper Provinces. The meeting was representative in its character. The next meeting, which was convened by Dr. Muhammad Ismail and held on the 4th of November at the Charbagh Stables, was more successful. The editor remarks that the success attending these meetings indicates wholesome progress.

OUDH PUNCH,
15th November, 1906.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
15th November, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

67. The Kanauj Punch of the 15th November, says that the efforts of the Bengalis to injure Manchester and Lancashire trade in cloth, have proved utterly futile and condemns the wholesale attack on Anglo-Indian officials on the supposition that they are all opposed to the swadeshi movement.

OUDH AKHBAR,
17th November, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

68. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 17th November, says that the swadeshi movement is gaining ground in Lucknow, and the residents there are starting hand-looms, and adopting other means for the promotion of indigenous products. The editor notes with satisfaction that the change in the material of clothing shows a marked change in favour of the swadeshi movement, and points out that cloth of swadeshi manufacture though apparently rough to begin with, has much better appearance than foreign cloth after it has been washed, and is far more durable.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
8th November, 1906.

Sugar.

69. The Kanauj Punch of the 8th November, contains a dialogue between Country and Foreign sugar, wherein the latter boasts of its refinement and cheapness, and is in turn informed that it lacks the sweetness of country sugar, is injurious to health, and is refined by means of bone-ash and blood, that the process is revolting and that the public having discovered its defects are renouncing its use all over the country.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
8th November, 1906.

The Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal.

70. The editor of the Kanauj Punch in its issue of the 8th November, expreses his extreme gratification at finding that the present Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal feels no less interested in the well-being of the Muhammadans than his predecessor, as shown by the Government Review of the last Police Administraiton Report of Eastern Bengal, wherein he has pointed out the necessity of conferring a larger number of appointments in the Police force on Muhammadans. He concludes with exhorting the Muhammadans to try their best to make themselves efficient for Government service.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
15th November, 1906.

The Muhammadans in Eastern Bengal.

71. The Kanauj Punch, of the 15th November, says that His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has notified that fourteen non-Bengali candidates are wanted for training at State expense in the Agra Medical School, with a view to their subsequent employment in the Army. The editor while appreciating this patronage, exhorts the Muhammadans to take time by the forelock, and points out, that it will be a very unfortunate thing if they do not come forward and benefit by the encouragement given by Government.

AL AKHLAQ,
October, 1906.

The Arya Samaj organs and the Muhammadans.

72. Al Akhlaq (Agra), for October, concurs with the Hindustáni (Lucknow), in condemning the tone of the Arya Samaj organs in the Punjab, and points out that vituperation is not calculated to facilitate the promulgation of their faith. The editor remarks in conclusion that the views expressed in these papers tend to widen the gulf between the Hindus and Muhammadans, and in consequence to hamper the progress of the country.

AL AKHLAQ,
October, 1906.

The relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

73. Al Akhláq (Agra), for October, while referring to the remarks of the Oudh Akhbár regarding the visit of the Amir of Kabul, commends the breadth of its views, and suggests that there is a great need for cultivating friendly relations between Hindus and Muhammadans. The editor suggests that Hindus and Muhammadans alike should co-operate in settling mutual grievances, that they should render mutual assistance in securing and protecting political rights and privileges, and cast aside all religious prejudices. He exhorts them to promote mutual good-will and to refrain from the use of such language as is calculated to injure one another's feelings, both in their speeches and in writings. He concludes with referring to certain articles in the Mufid-i-Ám (Agra) and the Kanauj Punch (Kanauj), which contain similar views, and points out that the Árya Bandhu (Lahore) has misrepresented facts in charging the Jásus (Agra) with being actuated by religious prejudices when condemning the attitude of an Arya Samajist whose indiscreet address led to the dispersion of a meeting which would otherwise have proved a great success.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
1st November, 1906.

The relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

74. The Awáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st November, regrets to find that the Muhammadans are very forward in finding occasion for complaining of their Hindu brethren. The editor says that the Muhammadan Press has been loud in its complaints against Pandit Jwala Prasad Sankhadhar, District Magistrate of Etah, ever since he convicted the Muhammadan jailor there on a charge of criminal breach of trust, and that the Muhammadans of Ludhiana posted placards and memorialized His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab during his recent visit in connection with the opening ceremony of the clock-tower, and requested him to protect them from the rule of Indians, which was nothing short of an attack on the present Deputy Commissioner, the Judge and the Civil Surgeon of Ludhiana, who are all Hindus.

The editor says, that the proprietor of a Muhammadan organ published in English has for sometime past left no stone unturned, to detract from the merit of Diwan Tek Chand, the Deputy Commissioner of Ludhiana, but finds to his extreme chagrin that Sir Charles Rivaz, the present Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab is highly satisfied with his admimistration of the district. The Muhammadans are also raising a cry to the effect that their proportion in the Education Department of the United Provinces is less than that of the Hindus, but they do not seem to realize, that their educational qualifications are far inferior to those of their Hindu brethren. He then points out that of the 122 candidates who have come out successful from the senior department of the Central Training College during the last ten years only five are Muhammadans, and that of the 154 students that have passed the Junior departmental examination, only 18 are Muhammadans. He thus concludes that Muhammadans wish to share appointments equally with the Hindus, without taking steps to compete with them at examinations.

MUFID-I-AM,
8th November, 1906.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

75. A correspondent in the Mufid-i-Am (Agra) of the 8th November, says that the difference of political views and aspirations in India is due to the diversity of nations inhabiting the country, who profess various religions, are descended from different stocks, have each a different history, and vary in numerical strength. He then remarks that the differences between the Hindus and the Muhammadans were not so marked as they are, before the Indian National Congress came to be organized by a number of educated Bengalis, who were the first to enunciate the principle of the greatest good for the greatest number in India; and to strike thereby at the root of the importance enjoyed by other nations, including Muhammadans. The aspect given to "cow-worship by the organization of the Gorakshni Sabha," the celebration of the anniversary of Sivaji and the consequent attack on Aurangzebe, the attempt to detract from the importance of the Urdu as a vernacular, and the resentment expressed at the partition of Bengal have had their share in widening the gulf between the Hindus and the Muhammadans.

He then exhorts the Muhammadans to maintain friendly relations with the Hindus, and to give them every possible assistance where necessary, without minding the cold treatment they receive at their hands, but enjoins them to hold themselves aloof in political matters, to watch the good and evil resulting to the Muhammadans from the Congress movement; and to have separate political organizations of their own, which will safeguard their interests against the encroachments of other communities. He points out that the Muhammadans should not merge the interests of their community into those of the National Congress, as they will thereafter have no distinct entity of their own, and will not be in a position to raise their voice against the unequal distribution of appointments and other advantages between the Hindus and the Muhammadans. Besides there seems no reason why the Muhammadans should not maintain their exclusive political status, in view of their being a distinct and permanent community. It has also to be borne in mind that the tendency of the Congress is to foster distrust between the Hindus and Europeans and Anglo-Indians. The happiness of the country demands that friendly relations should subsist between the Anglo-Indians, the Native Christians and the other communities inhabiting India.

The Muhammadans should no doubt treat the Hindus as brethren, living in the same country, but they must remember that they are united with the Christians by the much stronger bond of affinity in religion, and there is therefore no reason why they should snap asunder the tie between them and the Christians, simply with a view to please the Congress party who inculcate hatred of the Christians. The Europeans besides are the pioneers of civilization in the East, and dissociation from them is sure to hamper the social progress not only of the Muhammadans, but also of every other community inhabiting India. This again therefore makes it highly desirable that the Muhammadans should hold themselves aloof from the Congress. Again the demands of the Congress are exorbitant, and the tone adopted in making them is highly offensive. He then points out that the Muhammadans should not set themselves up as censors of the actions of Government, but should confine themselves to watching their interests, and to making loyal and constitutional representations to Government when necessary. He advises them to establish provincial political associations, and to have one central association to guide their actions; and concludes with suggesting the desirability of social and educational improvement, and with impressing them with the need for the formation of national character, which should absorb their attention in preference to political advancement.

OUDH AKHBAR,
12th November,
1906.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

76. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 12th November, says that it was resolved at a meeting convened by Maulvi Sulaiman Ahmad, Talukdar of Mahewa, and held at Sitapur on the 4th November, that steps should be taken to foster friendly relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

HINDOSTHAN,
10th November,
1906.

The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of the 10th November, says that the audience was exhorted to lay aside all racial differences, and to co-operate in securing their rights and privileges, and in promoting the interests of the country. The editor eulogizes the spirit of the Sitapur public, and suggests the desirability of such meetings being held all over India.

AL BASHIR,
13th November,
1906.

Hindu Officers and their relations with the Muhammadans.

77. Al Bashir Etawah of the 13th November, says that the Deputy Commissioner and the Civil Surgeon of Ludhiana against whom a memorial was submitted recently to His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab, are in the same category as Pandit Jwala Prasad, District Magistrate of Etah. The editor says that the Hindustani (Lucknow) and certain other Congress organs are upholding the conduct of these officers as they are bound by ties of religion, and points out that so long as racial prejudices continue to influence judgment the regeneration of India is impossible. He concludes with the remark that a Muhammadan or a European officer would find it difficult to hold his own if he were to be attacked by Congress organs just the same as these Hindu officers have been, owing to their racial animosity.

TAFRIH,
14th November,
1906.

Strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

78. The editor of the Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 14th November, says that certain selfish and unprincipled editors are wholly responsible for the somewhat strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans, which otherwise are not unsatisfactory, as is shown on the one hand by the facts that a Hindu lady has built an inn at Bombay for Hajis at the cost of twenty thousad rupees, and by the munificent donation of four thousand rupees given to the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, by a Hindu barrister at Rajkot, and on the other by the donation of seven hundred rupees by Muhammad Zaman Khan Sahib of Hyderabad to the Central Hindu College at Benares. He remarks that a meeting was convened recently by a Muhammadan talukdar and barrister to devise means to promote friendly relations between Hindus and Muhammadans, and exhorts native editors to refrain from making such remarks as are calculated to widen the gulf between the two communities.

ALIGARH
GAZETTE,
14th November,
1906.

The strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

79. A correspondent in the Aligarh Institute Gazette, of the 14th November, says that the over-zeal of certain Hindu and Muhammadan proselytes, who indulge in vituperation, to serve their own ends and to gain notoriety tends in a considerable degree to foment ill-feeling between the two communities. The celebration of the unniversary of Sivaji by the Bengalis and of Ahmad Shah Durrani by the Muhammadans, the methods adopted for advocating the claims of Hindi and Urdu, the partition of Bengal, the Muhammadan deputation, the equal distribution of memberships in the Provincial Council in Eastern Bengal, the attitude of the Hindu and Muhammadan Press towards the Muhammadan deputation and the Congress respectively, and the remarks made by each community to disparage the other are the chief causes that have led to the strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans. He concludes with exhorting both communities to cease from mutual attacks and vituperation, to forget the past and to co-operate for the common good of the country in future.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
1st November, 1906.

Mr. Baillie, Commissioner of Benares Division.

80. The Áwáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st November, while referring to the party given by Mr. Baillie, Commissioner of the Benares Division, to such of the local residents as were known to him, says that other District and Divisional officers might with advantage follow the example set by Mr. Baillie, as such a course is calculated to remove all misunderstanding between the rulers and the ruled. The editor, however, regrets that the number of officers who will approve of such a course is very limited, and remarks that the majority of them look down upon Indians and find it inconvenient even to grant them interviews.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
4th November, 1906.

The Deputy Commissioner of Ludhiana.

81. The Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 4th November, received on the 12th November, while referring to the unsuccessful attempt made by certain Muhammadans of Ludhiana to decry the administration of their Deputy Commissioner, Diwan Tek Chand, C.S., says that the popularity he enjoys is too well known to the public and to His Honour Sir Charles Rivaz, to lower him in their estimation in any degree, and that the Muhammadan community with the exception of a few detractors, reposes its full confidence in his justice and integrity.

MUSAFIR,
8th November, 1906.

The Eurasians.

82. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 8th November, says that the Eurasian is like a washerman's dog running constantly between his house and the ghat (bank of a river), that the Englishmen and the Indians alike look upon him with dislike, and that his fate is constantly agitating the minds of Englishmen. The editor says that a meeting was held recently at Manchester Hall where Bishop Weldon appealed to the sympathies of Englishmen pointing that they were responsible for bringing the Eurasian into existence, and should therefore undertake to look after his interest and try to ameliorate his condition.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
8th November, 1906.

The Muhammadans in jails.

83. The Kanauj Punch (Kanauj), of the 8th November, quotes facts and figures showing that the larger number of criminals in the Punjab, as apparent from the last Administration Report of the Province, comes from the Muhammadan community. The editor while deploring the sad state of affairs says that the charge of inertness brought against the Muhammadans is no doubt untrue, and expresses his apprehension that, if they continue to progress at the present rate, it will not be long before jails will be full of Muhammadans.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
8th November, 1906.

The degeneration of the Muhammadans.

84. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 8th November, says that the degeneration of the Muhammadans is due to their departure from the religious precepts laid down for their guidance, and to the jealousy that is fomenting enmity between creed and creed. The editor says that they should refrain from religious controversies, which drag them into courts of law, and expose them to the ignominy of seeking verdicts in matters of their religion from foreign judges. He adds that Muhammadan religious leaders are responsible for all religious schisms and differences, and exhorts them to cease from wrangling with one another and to endeavour to better the condition of their community.

OUDH PUNCH,
15th November, 1906.

Patriotism in Muhammadans.

85. The Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 15th November (vide para. No. 97, Selections No. 45 of 1906), says that Aligarh is looked upon as the repository of material prosperity to which all Muhammadans have to turn for the satisfaction of their earthly requirements, but it is to be regretted that as matters stand the interests of the nation cannot be advanced by the mere acquisition of a limited number of appointments in the services. India is in a state of transition, and a spirit of patriotism seems to be the growing tendency of the day. Hindu students are being constantly sent out with a view to complete their education in foreign countries, but it is not so in the case of the Muslim students. The Hindus are conscious of the fact that a sensibility to the requirements of the country, and of political rights is essential to the life of a nation, and that no amount of wealth can entitle them to political weight so long as they are devoid of this sensibility. Keen struggle is agitating the entire civilized world, when every nation is striving to keep ahead of others. The life of a nation lies in this forward movement. Its cessation is emblematical of the death of the nation. An extension of the foreign politics of the Aligarh College is at present highly desirable, and it should aim at securing and protecting the interests of the entire Muhammadan community inhabiting India. The College as it is, lacks national and political stamina in a remarkable degree. The remarkable success that attended Sir Saiyid's efforts was due to his sense of patriotism, and to the keen interest he evinced in securing and protecting the interests of the entire Muhammadan community. It is however to be regretted that the opposition he had set at rest was renewed soon after his death; and no respect was shown to the feelings of those who had worked side by side with him in promoting the interests of the College and the Muhammadan community as a whole. The result is, that the College is entirely in the hands of a European Principal and a number of European professors, who attach no weight whatever to the views and opinions of the Secretary. The correspondent refers in particular to the treatment accorded to Maulvi Sami-ulla Khan, and to the disgraceful conduct of the Secretary in connection with the burial of Mr. Mahmud within the precincts of the College, alongside of his father. Mr. Mahmud, it may be remembered, had saved Nawab Mohsin-ul-mulk from the great disgrace of a charge of embezzlement. Again his conduct in re-opening the controversy regarding Urdu and Hindi, and the manner in which he backed out of it are equally disgraceful. The Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College has in his hands degenerated from a national into a semi-Government institution, and flattery is its guiding principle. The boarding arrangements are highly discreditable, and no steps are taken to either improve them or to check the malpractices of those on whom this duty devolves.

ADVOCATE,
11th November,
1906.

Food not necessary for life.

86. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 11th November, says that a Brahmin lady aged 82 years has been for the last 13 days together living without taking any sort of food and apparently in the best of health. This circumstance has caused considerable surprise to the people of Bangalore.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th November,
1906.

Publication of rrticles causing disaffection in the Pioneer.

87. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 12th November, strongly deprecates the attitude of the Pioneer in publishing an article from a correspondent which is calculated to incite the Mahrattas and the Bengalis to violence and suggests that the Pioneer should reject such articles invariably.

AL BASHIR,
13th November,
1906.

Quack physicians.

88. Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 13th November, suggests that Hafiz Muhammad Ajmal Khan of Delhi should secure the co-operation of Hindus and Muhammadans in memorializing Government in behalf of the Madrassai Tibbiaya (School of Medicine) Delhi. The editor is of opinion that the public good done by the school, the proficiency attained by its students, and the incalculable harm done by quack physicians should be duly brought to the notice of Government, and suggests that only certificated physicians should be allowed to practise. He concludes with the hope that the matter will receive the approval of Government, and result in the protection of the public from unscrupulous swindlers.

RAHBAR
14th November,
1906.

Treatment of prisoners in Jails.

89. A correspondent in the Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th November, deprecates the reduction in the rations of prisoners in the Lucknow Central Jail with a view to reward a few that know how to please those in charge and in order to punish certain others who are unruly. He points out that the sick likewise in the Central Jail are not taken proper care of, and that the prisoners generally are subjected to many hardships. He concludes by inviting the attention of the Inspector-General of Prisons and hopes that inquiry will be set on foot to ascertain the evils prevailing in the Central Jail at Lucknow.

Raja Rampal Singh's endowment

KANAUJ PUNCH,
15th November, 1906.

90. The Kanauj Punch of the 15th November, eulogizes Raja Rampal Singh for the munificent endowment he has made for the maintenance of the two hospitals and a poor-house now in existence, and for the upkeep of a new College to be built at Kalakankar and to be called the Hanuman College in memory of his deceased father.

Bribery.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
15th November, 1906.

91. The Kanauj Punch, of the 15th November, says that bribery is rampant in every department of Government service both in India and England, and suggests that it is highly desirable that some means should be devised to check it effectively. He concludes with a reference to the disclosures made by a witness before the Commission inquiring into the corruption of the London Police.

Use of cigarettes amongst boys and children.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
15th November, 1906.

92. The Kanauj Punch of the 15th November, condemns the use of cigarettes amongst boys, and says that it is not only injurious but tends also to make youths ill-mannered, since they begin to smoke before their elders as the habit grows on them.

Deputy Collectors and Deputy Superintendents of Police.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
16th November, 1906.

93. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares) of the 16th November, while remarking on the strange anomaly in classing all Deputy Superintendents as officers of the first class for purposes of calculating travelling allowances, says that Deputy Collectors, whose pay ranges up to five hundred rupees are paid only second class travelling expenses. The editor invites the attention of Government to the matter and regards the existing practice as questionable.

The Gobardhan Nath fair in Charkhari.

HINDOSTHAN,
16th November, 1906.

94. The Hindi Hindoshtan (Kalakankar) of the 16th November, says that lectures were delivered by certain leading members of the Bharat Dharma Mahamandal on the Sanatan Dharma and the swadeshi movements during the Gobardhan Nath fair held in the Charkhari state (Bundelkhand). The editor remarks with much gratification that the Maharaja has interdicted the use of foreign sugar on pain of payment of a fine of a hundred rupees by the offender.

V.—LEGISLATION.

Election of Members for the Provincial Legislative Council.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
1st November, 1906.

95. The Áwáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st November, says that the term of the several members of the Provincial Legislative Council (the Hon'ble Munshi Madho Lal excepted) expires in November next, and the Municipal and District Boards have therefore been called upon to nominate their representatives. The editor remarks that raises hankering after seats in Councils do everything in their power to secure them, without giving a moment's thought to the responsibilities attaching to the office. He points out the necessity of laying aside all personal motives, and voting only for really deserving men, and deprecates the practice of siding with the majority. He concludes with the remark that men who sink their independence and are led to change their opinions, if pressure is brought to bear on them are the enemies of the country, and have no right to complain that their grievances are not attended to in the Councils.

Murder of children for the sake of ornaments.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
8th November, 1906.

96. The Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad) of the 8th November, while deprecating the conduct of parents allowing their children to go about unprotected with ornaments on their person, invites the attention of Government to its responsibility in the matter, and urges it to bring the subject under legislation.

VI.—RAILWAY.

The coolies on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
1st November, 1906.

97. The editor of the Áwáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st November, says that the coolies on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway at present demand more than six pies per bundle, and do not hesitate to put in more than the fixed number of passengers in certain compartments through interested motives. The editor hopes that both the Railway authorities and the contractors concerned will endeavour to check their demands and officiousness.

TUHFA-I-HIND,
11th November,
1906.

Conduct of coolies on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

98. A correspondent in the Tuhfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 11th November, invites the attention of the Railway authorities on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway to the inconvenience to passengers owing to the exorbitant demands of the coolies who ask more than six pies per bundle, and are rude when spoken to. He points out that he will be obliged to report the matter to the Railway Board if early steps are not taken to remove the existing evils.

ADVOCATE,
11th November,
1906.

Indian sweetmeats and refreshments.

99. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 11th November, while referring to the Indian sweetmeats and refreshments at the Lucknow Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway station, says that the removal of the carriage stand at the railway station further back, and the building of a separate lamp-room and official despatch office, would remove the ungainly site of rotten pots and pans, broken old furniture, dirt and soot of the platform, and admit of the rooms being utilized for the purpose of Native Refreshment Rooms. He says that hawkers of viands, shouting and howling about the platforms, are in themselves objectionable, and asks after all, why there should not be Native Refreshment Rooms or stalls on the platform. Nothing would be cooked there. He thinks that with nice arches, in place of small doors and windows, with fine counters and with plenty of light, the place would be attractive and good.

BHARAT JIWAN,
12th November,
1906.

Catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

100. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of the 12th November, disapproves of the resolution of the authorities concerned to cancel the contracts relating to the catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, and suggests that the arrangements, if placed in the hands of station masters, cannot be so efficient as they are in the hands of experienced contractors.

VII.—POST OFFICE.

TUHFA-I-HIND,
11th November,
1906.

Complaints regarding the working of the Post Office at Moradabad.

101. A correspondent in the Tuhfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 11th November, invites the attention of the Postmaster of Moradabad to the numerous complaints made from time to time regarding the delay in the delivery of letters both in and outside the Post Office. He points out that an insufficient supply of stamps to the postmen and the improper treatment of certain letters as bearing are due to laxity of supervision.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

QULQUL,
29th October, 1906.

Translation of anti-Islamic works.

102. The editor of the Qulqul (Bijnor) of the 29th October, says that the works on Islam written by European authors are necessarily hostile to Muhammadan interests, and it is extremely desirable that the translations of such works by Muhammadan writers should contain a more or less elaborate preface setting forth the motives that lead to the preparation of such works. Mere translations without a preface of the sort indicated tend only to give a wider circulation to the views of the author and injure the interests of the Muhammadan community at large. He then refers to Mr. Alfred Blunt's work on the future of Islam translated by Mir Akbar Husain, Sub-Judge, and to another work by a French author on the administration of Arabia, translated by Mr. Saiyid Hasan of Bilgram, and points out that both these gentlemen failed in their duty towards their community by omitting to put up a prefatory note warning the public of the policy underlying these works. He refers also to the translation of the Life of Muhammad by Washington Irving, who has indulged in gross misrepresentation and has distorted the tenets of the faith to obtain conclusions prejudicial to Muhammadan interests.

MUSAFIR,
8th November,
1906.

His Honour Sir James Digges La-Touche and the Muhammadans.

103. The Musafir (Agra), of the 8th November, says that the exultation of the Muhammadans over the condescension shown by His Honour Sir James Digges LaTouche by personally attending the celebration of the Nativity of Muhammad within the compound of the Government House at Naini Tal on the 4th October last, shows an utter want of common sense on their part, as one cannot possibly imagine that

His Honour was actuated by anything but policy in honouring the meeting with his presence.

The sufferings of pilgrims.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 15th November, 1906.

104. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 15th November, says that History points out that Christians, Muhammadans, Buddhists, Hindus and all other nations have shown a yearning for visiting holy places, and have performed pilgrimages notwithstanding the untold sufferings which they have to face on the journey. The editor while referring to the part played by pilgrimage in Hinduism, which is the most ancient of the religions noted above, says that the wealthiest people accustomed to every comfort, cheerfully undergo the greatest privations, as they believe that in the mortification of the flesh is the salvation of the soul. He then points out that the sufferings imposed by the pandas or the priests are far more serious than those occasioned by the difficulties of travel, want of food and so forth. The pandas really prey upon pilgrims and live upon them, and are not satisfied with the liberal payment they make in spite of the fact that they earn the money without working for it, and most of them are in affluent circumstances. There is a widespread network of conspiracy in which policemen, guides, ekka and ghariwalas all join. At railway stations the agent of one priest ousts another by bringing some policeman in to his aid. Guides and ghariwalas take pilgrims to the priests by whom they are employed. And finally the pilgrims are put in bodily fear by the priests or their men and are compelled to pay more than they are willing or can afford. He then points out that Government cannot interfere and that legislation is out of the question, but suggests that society ought to be able to deal with the evil which is essentially social. In conclusion he suggests that vigilance committees might be established at all great religious centres where extortion is prevalent, and hopes that these with the sympathy and co-operation of the authorities will be able to bring about a radical reform.

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

GAUHAR-I-SHAHWAR,
November,
1906.

The Caliphate of the Sultan of Turkey and the Shia Muhammadans.

1. The Gauhar-i-Shahwar (Lucknow), for November, says, that an attempt to set up the title of the Sultan of Turkey to the Caliphate is nothing short of an insult to the religious feelings of the Shia Muhammadans; and suggests that, if the Sunnis claim this distinction for him with the sole object of effecting union amongst Muhammadans generally, and of impressing the public with the grandeur of Islam, they should be content to call him The Protector of Mecca and Medina or the King of Kings, which will not be in the least objectionable to the Shia community, and will all the same keep up the dignity of the Sultan in the eyes of other nations.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th November,
1906.

Mirza Ghulam Ahmad Qadyani.

2. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) of the 16th November, says that Mirza Ghulam Ahmad Qadyani is a conspicuous time-server, that he by far outstrips the late Sir Saiyid Ahmad in this respect, and may properly be said to be Mr. Gladstone's worthy successor by his continual attacks on the Sultan of Turkey. The editor is of opinion that the attacks of Mirza Qadyani on the Sultan are due solely to interested motives, and to a desire to humour Englishmen with a view to serve his private ends. He points out that the Mirza will best serve his ends by opposing the swadeshi movement, and by bringing the Bengalis to a right frame of mind, and so if successful he may get a jagir and title from Government.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
19th November,
1906.

Friendly relations between Turkey and Germany.

3. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 19th November, expresses deep concern at hearing that Germany is thinking of bringing India under her sway, and is friendly with Turkey, chiefly with the view of having the Hedjaz Railway completed with the least possible delay. The editor surmises that, though Turkey might join Germany in the invasion, yet it is impossible to conclude that the Kaiser would permit the Sultan to govern India all by himself; and concludes with the remark that the English Press is led to indulge in conjectures of this sort owing to the attitude of Indian Muhammadans towards the Sultan of Turkey, and the zeal they are evincing in aiding the construction of the Hedjaz Railway.

ANJAN AKHBAR,
19th November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement in Persia.

4. The Anjan Akhbar (Moradabad), of the 19th November, says that the Muhammadan opponents of the swadeshi movement in Bengal will be surprised to learn that it has found favour with their brethren in Persia where learned men have resolved to boycott foreign piecegoods and other articles.

MUFID-I-AM,
16th November,
1906.

Indian colonies in South Africa.

5. A correspondent in the Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of the 16th November, has made out a comparative statement quoting facts and figures to show that the Indian colonists were much better off under the Boers than they are under the British Government. The editor remarks that they are the only sufferers under the new regime.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
19th November,
1906.

A proposed University in Egypt.

6. The editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam of the 19th November, expresses its extreme gratification at learning that the Egyptians have already been able to secure donations and subscriptions, amounting to twenty-four thousand pounds to meet the expenses of a university which they propose to establish at the cost of one million pounds.

ADVOCATE,
22nd November,
1906.

Indian students in Japan.

7. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 22nd November, says that up to this time many students have come over here from India. At present there are more than fifty students in Japan. Bombay is represented by 9, Baroda by 2, Madras by 8, Coorg by 1, Punjab by 1, U. P. by 2, C. P. by 2, Gujrat by 3, Hyderabad by 2. The rest are all Bengalis.

Indians at home think that Japan only is the proper place where Indian students should be sent for technical education. But it is a great mistake to think so.

* * * * * * *

As regards the factories, he says that, with the exception of a few, all are closed against foreigners ; Indian students tried to enter into many big industrial factories, but they were not successful. They go there in the hope of learning the manufacture of rubber, sugar, felt, cloth, applied chemistry or mining, but have to be satisfied with that of soap, matches and buttons. There is one small factory, which allows Indian students on receipt of 2·50 yen as a monthly fee. Finding no other business, about a dozen flocked into it and became pencil experts.

It is a pity that in most cases, Indians are themselves the cause of their own ruin. The nature of Indians is such as not to foresee the consequences of their doings. Their habit of being selfish is a stumbling block to their brethren. For instance, there was a student who wanted to learn knitting, and as he found it difficult to enter a factory, he promised the proprietor to buy machines from him in case he was taught the art. His request was complied with. After learning the business he refused to buy the machines. Since that time no knitting factory admits Indian students. And the Japanese have ample opportunity to say that Indians are liars. It is of no use giving all such details. One case of personal experience will give a good idea. The correspondent recounted how he wanted to learn India-rubber manufacture and made every endeavour to enter a factory. The reply which was given to him is this :—

'Dear Mr. Pande,

Alluding to the conversation I had with you yesterday, I told Mr. Yonei all that you said, and asked him to be good enough to allow you to get into the Rubber works, but to my great disappointment I am obliged to advise you that he cannot see his way to comply with your request. He sympathises with you, but regrets very much that he cannot accept your offer. He states that according to the introduction of a certain Professor of the Imperial University, he allowed an Indian student some years ago to enter the Rubber works who promised that he would regularly attend the works every day for two years certain ; but after staying there only a month or so he went away, and entered Toys Rubber Manufacturing Co., one of the Rubber works competitors.

'The rubber works were very much inconvenienced thereby, and since that time Mr. Yonei has made up his mind not to allow any foreign students to enter the Rubber works.

'Under the circumstance, he cannot comply with your desire, and asks me to convey this information to you.'

(b).—Home.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
19h November,
1906.

The Liberals and the Indians.

8. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 19th November, says that the Liberals while out of power, expressed their greatest sympathy with the Indians, but now that they are in power they try to put them off with empty promises of a hopeful future.

TAFRIH,
21st November,
1906.

The Prince of Wales and the Indians.

9. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 21st November, says that His Highness the Prince of Wales has recently addressed His Excellency the Governor of Madras, asking him to write to him more frequently, so as to enable him to keep up his interest in the Indians, whose hearty reception during his recent visit to India has generated a genuine sympathy in his heart. The editor says that the message has inestimable value at the present moment when the Anglo-Indian Press is doing all that it can to detract from the loyalty of the Indians.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
7th November,
1906.

The Maharaja of Burdwan and the Indian National Congress.

10. The Rafiq Punch (Moradabad), of the 7th November, disapproves of the conduct of the Maharaja of Burdwan in condemning the Indian National Congress at an interview with Mr. Morley, who however cut him short by pointing out that the Congress was distinctly one of the most useful institutions that had come into existence during the administration of India by Englishmen. The editor then points out that the solemnity with which the residents of Burdwan observed the partition day is really highly creditable to them considering the views that are held by its ruling chief, and concludes with the remark that, if Indians continue to evince the same sympathy as the residents of Burdwan have shown towards the Bengalis, no amount of sycophant chieftains can do any harm to the country.

INDIAN PUNCH,
12th November, 1906.

The practical work of the Congress.

11. The Indian Punch (Budaun), of the 12th November, says that the Congress so far has done nothing beyond passing and re-affirming certain resolutions, and awakening Indians to their rights and privileges. The editor then refers to the views expressed in a recent issue of the Bengalee, pointing out that it is highly desirable that the Indians should take the education of their countrymen into their own hands, that they should pay sufficient attention to technical education so as to enable the Indians to earn their livelihood; and that district political associations should be formed, with a view to watch local interests and education, and to promote local arts and industries. The consensus of opinion throughout the country seems to be in favour of these views, but the editor thinks that it is impossible to give practical effect to this scheme.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
14th November, 1906.

The Times and the Indian National Congress.

12. The Rafiq Punch of the 14th November, while commenting on an article in the London Times of the 16th October, says that the Times has changed its policy, in that it has given a prominent place in its columns to a leading article on the Indian National Congress, wherein it points out that the Congress has been able to enlist on its behalf, the sympathies of a large section of Englishmen and Muhammadans, who would join it but for the extreme views of certain of its promoters; and that the party advocating moderate views could produce much better results, if such of its leaders as belong to the old school could lay aside all prejudices, and thus form a separate party of their own. The Times thinks that the Congress in India takes the place of the Opposition in England, and it is looked upon by a large section of Englishmen as a lawful and natural institution.

MUFID-I-AM,
16th November, 1906.

The Punjab Provincial conference.

13. A correspondent in the Mufid-i-Am (Agra) of the 16th November, while remarking on the success and the utility of the Punjab Conference, points out that it is only an offshoot of the National Congress, and that the Muhammadans should beware of such conferences, lest the misnomer should lead them to join these institutions.

GAUHAR-I-SHAHWAR,
November, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

14. The Gauhar-i-Shahwar (Lucknow), for November, says that of the Muhammadans alleged to have been consulted by Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk, the names of three at least have been ascertained, and these are none other than Mr. Archbold, the Principal of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, Mr. Sharf-ud-din, barrister-at-law (Patna) and Nawab Imad-ul-Mulk Mr. Saiyid Husain of Bilgram. Mr. Archbold to begin with was of opinion that Government should fix the number of Muhammadan representatives in the Council, and that each of them should be elected by at least one thousand Indian Muhammadans of note vested by Government with the right to vote at elections. Subsequently however he changed his views, and was of opinion that the representatives in the Council should be selected both by nomination and election, so that the Government and the public alike should have reason to be satisfied with the scheme adopted. It has been suggested that there should be a fixed number of Muhammadans in the Council, that on a vacancy arising Government should, in consultation with certain leading Muhammadans, nominate two men, invite public opinion and send up the ten or twelve names thus proposed, to the Viceroy, who should select one man out of the lot. Mr. Sharf-ud-din likewise agreed with Mr. Archbold in thinking that representation by election will lead to ill-feeling between Sunnis and Shias, that the proper course would be to fix the number of Muhammadan representatives, who should be selected by Government, that if Government has to set apart a number of memberships for the sects that are in a minority, it will have to extend the same privilege to Christians, Sikhs, Parsis, Jains and other communities, that the members of the Council should be the representatives of the Hindus and the Muhammadans alike, and that it is therefore not desirable that Muhammadan representatives should be elected by members of their community exclusively. It has also been pointed out that the memorial was drafted by Nawab Imad-ul-Mulk, and, after undergoing considerable alterations, and exclusion of such matter as was calculated to widen the gulf between Hindus and Muhammadans, received the approval of the meeting held at Lucknow on the 16th September. The editor points out that the omission of the Viceroy to touch the question of a suggested increase in the existing number of Muhammadans in Government service cannot be looked upon as purely accidental, and deserves the serious consideration of the entire Muhammadan community. The Viceroy did not likewise say anything regarding the appointment of Muhammadan Judges in the High Courts. He omitted to deal with the question of the representation of various classes and communities in the Municipal and District Boards, though they have been pronounced by His Excellency to be the initial rungs in the ladder of self-government. The editor refers in conclusion to certain remarks in the London Times, which expresses dissatisfaction at the results achieved by the Muhammadan deputation, and points out that the failure of the deputation was due mainly to the fact that the memorialists were selfish, narrow, minded and hasty in the organization of their scheme. He concludes with the remark that the Viceroy avoided all reference to the points noted because all classes and sects were not represented in the deputation, that it represented the interests of the educated community only, and suggests that the interests of the sections that are in a minority should likewise be protected by Government.

JASUS,
14th November,
1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

15. The Jásus (Agra) of the 14th November, while referring to the disappointment experienced by the Muhammadans at the hands of His Excellency Lord Minto advises them not to resign themselves to their fate, and exhorts them to exert themselves as a whole, until they can secure their rights from Government.

EXPRESS,
15th November,
1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

16. The Express (Lucknow), of the 15th November, endorses the criticism of the Paisa Akhbár, so far as the attitude of the organisers of the deputation towards Muslim Press is concerned. Not a single representative of the Muhammadan Press in India was present at the Lucknow meeting, where the address was finally adopted; and it is certainly a matter of the greatest surprise and regret that such an important section of the community should have escaped notice. In the name of the entire Muslim Press the editor protests against the procedure, and against the wholesale exclusion of men who as a class were perhaps better qualified than any other section of the Indian Musalmans to take part in the deliberations of the meeting. It is a pity that Muhammadan leaders have not yet learnt to properly appreciate the importance of the Press as a factor of great value in the social and political life of the people.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
16th November,
1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

17. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 16th November, while scoffing at the views expressed by the Vakil, on the comments it (Shahna-i-Hind) made sometime back on the Muhammadan deputation, says that, considering the attitude taken up by the Muhammadans in their memorial, one cannot fail to see that their aims and objects are just the same as those of the Hindus, and it matters little whether they join the Muhammadan Educational Conference, the Muhammadan Political Association, or the National Congress. The editor says that the Hindus have spent lacs of rupees in trying to secure political rights, and it is presumption on the part of Muhammadans to demand their "lion's share," just when a hope of success was beginning to dawn on the Hindus. He then says that the memorialists have tried to make much of their loyalty and faithfulness, and asks if they had the option of adopting a defiant attitude, and if the Hindus can be said to have been disloyal to Government. The threat that the feelings stirred up by recent events, "specially among the younger generation of Muhammadans might in certain circumstances and under certain contingencies easily pass beyond the control of temperate counsel and sober guidance" contrasts remarkably with the abject tone adopted throughout the memorial, and verges on the grotesque. It will be a matter for extreme regret if the memorialists wish to signify thereby that the younger generation of Muhammadans is disaffected and will grow mutinous if its energies are not diverted otherwise, but, if it simply means that it will join the Congress, then one fails to see where the danger comes in, as the Congress has been able to do no harm to Government during the twenty years of its existence: on the other hand the views expressed by the Viceroy and the Secretary of State about the attitude of Congressmen are very encouraging to those interested in the Congress movement. The promoters of the Congress depend upon the justice of Government, and the tone adopted by them has, unlike that of the memorialists, been all along free both from servile flattery and impudent threats to their rulers. It is very much to be regretted that Sir Saiyid's followers are beginning to depart from his teachings, only within a few years of his death, and have in the memorial presented to the Viceroy enunciated a policy which he considered suicidal. The memorialists have thrown the apple of discord, which has affirmed the already existing rivalry between the two communities, and will no doubt retard their political progress for some time to come. The swadeshi movement and the partition of Bengal gave birth to the Muhammadan deputation, and the memorialists felt that, considering that Government disfavoured the attitude of the Hindus in general, and of the Bengalis in particular, they could safely calculate upon coming out successful in the contest for equality of rights and privileges. He concludes with the remark that they have however realized that they were mistaken in their calculations, and have been sadly disappointed in their expectations of a "lion's share."

Divine dispensation and the Muhammadan deputation.

TAFRIH,
21st November,
1906.

18. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 21st November, says that the Nawab of Dacca had sent two photographs of the pro-partition celebration for publication in the Graphic and the Black and White, which represented the Muhammadans in a posture of prayer, and thanksgiving at the partition of Bengal, with instructions to add a note to that effect, but as chance would have it, the note in the Black and White is to the effect that the large concourse of thirty thousand Muhammadans had assembled at Shadbagh (Dacca) to protest against the partition of Bengal and to offer prayers for a return to the old order of things. The editor joins the Amrita Bazar Patrika, in rejoicing at the mistake, which he attributes to Divine will, and remarks that it is true that later on a paragraph will appear to contradict the mistake made, but the mischief has been done, and it will be difficult to remove the impression already created on the public mind. The public, reading both the Graphic and the Black and White will feel quite confused at the contradictory notes in the two papers, and it is to be hoped that the Nawab of Dacca himself will look upon this mistake as due to Divine intervention.

The Pioneer on the Muhammadan deputation and the partition of Bengal.

TAFRIH,
21st November,
1906.

19. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 21st November, says that the Bengalee points out the incongruity of the remarks of the Pioneer in suggesting that the Muhammadan deputation was intended to affirm that the Muhammadan community as a whole expresses its formal disapproval of the agitation of the Bengalis. The Bengalee points out that the Muhammadans abstained from making any reference to the partition of Bengal in their memorial, and that the argument set up by the Pioneer is a bare assumption. The Muhammadans, in the absence of all reference to the question in their memorial, cannot be said to have expressed any views one way or the other. His Highness Agha Khan has besides expressed his views in unmistakable language, and pointed out that he would not join the deputation if the memorialists had even attempted to touch the question in their memorial. The editor then says that many others would in like manner refuse to join the deputation if any attempt were made at taking up a hostile attitude to the Bengali agitation over the partition question.

The Shia Muhammadans.

SURMA-I-ROZGAR,
16th November,
1906.

20. The Surma-i-Rozgar (Agra), of the 16th October, says that the Shia Muhammadans feel at present much concerned about their future well-being, that as regards their secular education they should content themselves with the existing private and Government schools and colleges, and with regard to their religious education, there is no reason, why the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, which has received their aid ever since its foundation, should not be able to make proper arrangements for students belonging to their community, and that where institutions are under the management of other sects and communities, the Shias should have the spiritual training of the students of their community exclusively in their hands. Turning to the political interests of the Shias, the editor suggests that to begin with they should make common cause with Sunnis against the Hindus, and, when they have secured their interests against the encroachments of the Hindus, they can settle matters with the Sunnis.

ALMORA AKHBAR,
31st October 1906.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller in South Africa.

21. The Almora Akhbar of the 31st October, while referring to the deputation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller to South Africa, asks if his visit is intended to improve the nature of the inhabitants there or his own.

CITIZEN,
12th November, 1906.

Passive resistance of the Indians.

22. The Citizen (Allahabad) of the 12th November, says :—The reactionary tendency of the Indian Government, and utter disregard paid to public opinion, culminating in the Partition of Bengal have driven the people to adopt "passive resistance" as one of the means to bring their grievances home to the rulers. Prayers and appeals have been the instruments long resorted to, but their futility has led to the adoption of more telling and effective ways. It may not therefore be out of place, to discuss what act or acts constitute "passive resistance," and how far their omission or commission is desirable.

The boycott of British goods occupies the most eminent place among such acts. There can be no question about its legitimacy, while in point of effectiveness it is the most telling means ever devised. The British, being essentially a commercial nation, any diminution of their trade brought about through our agency is sure to draw their attention to our long-standing grievances. The boycott has also a positive side, inasmuch as it tends to regenerate our already decayed industries. In the interests of the British manufacturer, most of our industries have been killed on purpose. It is for us to revive them.

The strikes come in next. It must, however, be remembered that a strike in India has a different meaning from what it has in European countries. The fight there is only between capital and labour. Another and a very important element enters into the question here, when race distinction and not merit comes to regulate the wages. The English or the Eurasian workman gets at least four times the wages of an equally if not better skilled Indian workman. Such caste distinction could not fail to arouse the most bitter race jealousy, and no amount of shooting, as practised lately at Jamalpur, would put a stop to the loud complaints of the workmen, so long as equality of treatment was not assured to them.

The third class of acts, to which we may have recourse under certain circumstances are those which, though perfectly legitimate are the eye-sore of Anglo-Indians of the class of Mr. Emerson of Bakerganj or Major Parsons of Delhi. If a meeting can be held under the law at a certain place, or if a procession can be led through certain streets, the arbitrary orders of local magnates prohibiting them should not be binding on us. The patriots of Bengal who refused to be enrolled as constables, firmly believing that orders for their enrolment could not be lawfully enforced against them, afford a good example of such acts. Resignation too when necessary of honorary appointments might with advantage be resorted to. Those who have to assist the Government in various Councils and Boards, at times find it hard to continue their support without doing violence to their feelings. The only way left is to resign. The resignation of twenty-eight Calcutta Commissioners, in a body, is a notable illustration of this principle.

The idea underlying such acts is that of self-assertion, consistent with loyalty. The Anglo-Indian Press, and specially the yellow section of it, might vainly smell sedition, where there was none. They constitute an attempt at self-improvement, pure and simple, though interested men would characterise them as disloyal.

SURMA-I-ROZGAR,
16th November, 1906.

Representative form of Government in India.

23. The Surma-i-Rozgar (Agra) of the 16th November, while referring to the representative form of Government in Persia and China, remarks that Asia will very soon have Parliamentary Government on the lines that exists in Europe, and says that it remains to be seen when government on this system is adopted in India.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
16th November, 1906.

The Hindus and Muhammadans.

24. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 16th November, reproduces an article from the Observer (Lahore) wherein an attempt has been made to show that the consensus of public opinion in England and in India is against the Bengalis, whose agitation is in marked contrast with the loyal representations of the Muhammadans. The Bengalis, however, are fully conscious of the fact that the suzerainty of the British Government is necessary in the interests of India for a good long time to come, and that Government is endeavouring to improve the condition of the country. The editor suggests the desirability of the Bengalis sending up a deputation of their own in imitation of the Muhammadans, to make an open acknowledgment of the privileges enjoyed under British rule, so as to disabuse the mind of Government of the existing misunderstanding.

Sir Saiyid Ahmad and the Hindus.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th November,
1906.

25. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th November, says that the Hindustani (Lucknow) has made a futile attempt to show in its issue of the 9th November that to begin with Sir Saiyid Ahmad supported Congress views. The editor points out that the publication of the "Star in the East" and the "Dialogue between Maulvi Farid-ud-din and Ram Bakhsh" and the wide circulation these pamphlets had, led Sir Saiyid to oppose the Congress openly lest the English public should be led to think that the Muhammadans likewise were disloyal. Sir Saiyid was never hostile to the Hindus as a community, but his one aim was to see that the Muhammadans did not get into trouble by joining the Hindus in their opposition to Government.

BHARAT JIWAN,
19th November,
1906.

26. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 19th November, while referring to the equal rights and privileges enjoyed by the Hindus and Muhammadans in Kabul, says that things are very different under the British rule in India, where Englishmen occupy a much higher status than the Indians

The visit of the Duke of Connaught to India.

ARYA MITRA,
16th November,
1906.

27. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th November, says that the visit of the Duke of Connaught to India has been arranged for in this unexpected way with the sole view of securing at the ensuing Darbar at Agra the presence of native Princes and Chiefs, most of whom refused to attend when invited merely to meet the Amir of Kabul. The editor in another column says that everything in Agra is becoming very scarce owing to the ensuing Darbar though it is yet far off, and it is to be feared that much public inconvenience will be caused in consequence.

III.—Native States.

Jaipur.

JASUS,
14th November,
1906

28. A correspondent in the Jásus (Agra), of the 14th November, says that corruption prevails in every department in Jaipur, and that backdoor influence plays an important part in all official dealings. There are however a few noble exceptions like Thakur Umrao Singh, who neither encourage nor connive at malpractices. He then points out that one Balji who is a tailor has considerable influence over the Maharaja, and is much feared by the officer of the state. The Prime Minister though a good man is quite incapable of carrying on the duties of his office, and the education department in Jaipur is being monopolized by the Bengalis.

Anonymous petitions in Rampur.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
16th November,
1906.

29. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 16th November, says that ever since His Highness the Nawab of Rampur took action against Mansab Ali, and arrived at important results by instituting enquiries on the strength of an anonymous petition, the opposite parties that have been brought together into Rampur recently, are making such applications the chief weapon of attack against their enemies, and find it to be a convenient channel for the diffusion of their discontent. The editor says that this points to the political deterioration of the State, and it is high time that the matter should receive the earnest consideration of His Highness the Nawab of Rampur.

The Maharaja of Baroda.

ANJAN AKHBAR,
19th November,
1906.

30. The Anjan Akhbar (Moradabad), of the 19th November, says on the authority of the Rash Goftar that the absence of Chiefs from their states for considerable lengths of time is extremely detrimental to the interests of their subjects. The editor then makes particular mention of the Maharaja of Baroda and his frequent trips to Europe which in his opinion interfere materially with the proper administration of the state.

RISALA-I-ZAMINDAR WA-KASHTKAR,
October 1906.

Charge of criminial breach of trust against the editor of the Qulqul.

31. The Risala-i-Zamindar-wa-Kashtkar (Bijnor), for October, while referring to the very light sentence passed on the editor of the Qulqul (Bijnor), mentioned at paragraph 29 of Selections No. 46, suggests the necessity of the Hon'ble High Court calling for the record in the case and passing a deterrent sentence in order to set an example to others.

Justice á lá mode.

32. The Citizen (Allahabad) of the 12th November, reproduces at full length under the heading of justice á lá mode, the judgment of Mr. Kemp, Magistrate of Kulu in re E. T. Paul, 10th King Edward's Own Cavalry versus Chub-ru and nine others, sentencing ten coolies to six weeks' rigorous imprisonment, one to three months' rigorous imprisonment and one to a fine of rupees ten.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
15th November, 1906.

Common gaming-houses.

33. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 15th November, says that it is extremely desirable that deterrent sentences should be passed in cases of gambling, as no sooner an offender is let off with a fine, than he takes to gambling again, though perhaps there is a change in the scene of his operations.

MUSAFIR,
15th November, 1906.

Contempt of court.

34. The Musafir (Agra), of the 15th November, while quoting from the Daily Despatch (Liverpool) and commenting on the language adopted by one Mr. Smith towards a court in Southport, which the court regarded as amounting to contempt, says that no action was taken by the court at home on the strong language used by Mr. Smith, but things would have been very different if some Anglo-Indian Magistrate had been addressed in like manner, by an Indian in this country, and two years' rigorous imprisonment would have been the lowest sentence imposed for contempt of court in his case.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
19th November, 1906.

Conviction of Mr. Martin on a charge of homicide in Calcutta.

35. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 19th November, says that Mr. Martin has been sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment for running over a native while driving in his motor-car which resulted in his death. The editor thinks that the sentence is too severe for a European, and doubts if the conviction will be upheld in appeal. The accused is on bail pending the decision of the appeal, and the editor asks if such a procedure would be followed if he were a native.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR,
20th November, 1906.

Excise.

36. The editor of the Sulaimani-Akhbar of the 20th November, quotes figures for the last three years showing a steady increase in the revenues from excise, and remarks that this points to the fact that the Indians are sinking into a race of drunkards. He points out that it is the duty of Government to impose restrictions on the sale of liquor irrespective of all considerations about a fall in the revenues.

(b).—Police.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
15th November, 1906.

Rewards for assistance to police.

37. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 15th November, views with satisfaction the encouragement given to the public by grant of jagirs and other rewards for co-operation with the police and expresses a hope that the privilege will not be misused by those concerned.

BHARAT JIWAN,
19th November, 1906.

Strike of the vegetable sellers at Gaya.

38. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 19th November, while referring to the strike of dealers in vegetables at Gaya owing to police oppression, says that such complaints resemble those of extortion of money from passengers made against the Railway Police, and are to be met with frequently.

Conservancy arrangements in Moradabad.

SITARA-I-HIND, 4th November, 1906.

39. The Sitara-i-Hind (Moradabad) of the 4th November, points out that the conservancy arrangements under consideration in Moradabad will cause much public inconvenience, and necessitate that women should walk out of their houses and go from one quarter to another for the purpose of answering calls of nature, if the public latrine is built in Mohalla Bara Shah Safa. He further condemns the erection of a public latrine near the Imambara in Dindarpura quarter, regardless of all considerations about the sanctity of the Imambara and the religious feelings of the Muhammadans. The orders directing that all mud latrines in houses in Asalatpura should cease to be used, is another source of great inconvenience, as the public latrine is situated in an uninhabited and out of the way place, and young women and old decrepit, and blind men will find it very difficult to walk all the distance in the dead of night to answer calls of nature. He concludes with the suggestion that the public residing in the quarters referred to may be ordered to build pucca latrines inside their houses instead of the mud ones, and thus the disgrace and inconvenience that the women will experience by having to go to public latrines will be avoided.

The Municipal Secretary of Moradabad.

SITARA-I-HIND, 12th November, 1906.

40. The Sitara-i-Hind (Moradabad), of the 12th November, complains of the conduct of the local Municipal Secretary and says that he has recently been using his official position to gratify his spite and has issued objectionable orders in connection with sanitary arrangements in the city.

The Municipal Secretary at Delhi.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 19th November, 1906.

41. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 19th November, while referring to the disgraceful state of accounts in the Municipality of Delhi and the consequent removal of the European Secretary from his office, says that the order directing that the Municipal Secretary henceforward should be a European is misleading, and is so worded, only in order to induce the impression that the defaulting Secretary was a native, though as a matter of fact no native has ever been a Municipal Secretary at Delhi. The editor says that, if racial predilections did not guide the district authorities, and personal merit formed the criterion for selection, their choice would fall on a native. He expresses his regret at finding that the local authorities are not acting up to the wishes of the Prince of Wales and Mr. Morley, who have pointed out that Indian feelings should be respected, and that sympathetic treatment whenever possible should be accorded to them, and that they trample over the rights of Indians in defiance of the promises held out in the Royal Charter. The editor regards the exclusive appointment of Europeans to fill the office of Municipal Secretary as a reflection on native integrity, and regrets to learn from his correspondent that the Delhi public lack the moral courage to memorialize Government on the subject, and to point out the anomaly of the order, excluding Indians who have shown themselves capable of holding high Government appointments in all departments.

The Durga Kund, Benares.

BHARAT JIWAN, 19th November, 1906.

42. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 19th November, disapproves of the suggestion made by Babu Gobind Das before the Local Municipal Board, which was to the effect that the Durga Kund is unhealthy and malodorous and should therefore be filled up and brought on a level with the adjoining ground, so that a public garden may be planted on its site, in case it is found impracticable to change its water periodically.

Cruelty to animals.

JASUS, 14th November, 1906.

43. The Jásus (Agra) of the 14th November, invites the attention of Government and of the Municipal Board in Lucknow to the cruelty to which animals there are subjected by cartmen, who overload their carts and beat the animals brutally when the poor beasts find the burden too much for their strength. The editor points out that the local police do not at all interfere in the matter and remain passive witnesses of the cruelty, and suggests that the weights to be carried in carts should be fixed as has been done in Fyzabad.

The Central Hindu College.

44. The Central Hindu College Magazine for November, says that the Council of Regency of the Faridkote State is refusing to continue some charitable contributions of the late Raja, although on his death-bed he wrote a letter, saying that he did not wish his charities to be stopped. His foundation in the C. H. C., the Balbir Sanskrit Chair, is therefore destroyed, though pledged to endure by the most solemn promises that a Hindu Ruler can make. A Sikh nobleman has, however, stepped forward to carry on the chair, and has raised its value from Rs. 100 to Rs. 150 per mensem. He will not allow his own name to be connected with the chair, but has re-named it the Vasanta Chair.

A grievance of the Budaun students.

45. A correspondent in the Citizen (Allahabad), of the 12th November, says that the Union Club (Budaun), was inaugurated by the boarders of the local District School, some 14 years ago, and its anniversary has been held year by year. The year before last, some anti-Hindus represented to the Collector that the Club was set on foot only to celebrate the Divali festival, and this sentiment of theirs was voiced forth by the local Zul Qarnain. The Collector thereupon called for the papers of the Club and was eventually satisfied that the allegations were unfounded. The agitation was, however, kept up, and the head master thought it prudent to break up the Club this year. He was probably intimidated into committing this unwarranted act. The generous interest you take in the student community has led me to air this grievance before the public through your esteemed paper.

JASUS,

1906.

Boarding arrangements in the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

46. The Jásus (Agra) of the 14th November, contains an article purporting to have been contributed by the students of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College complaining of extremely unsatisfactory arrangements of the College boarding-house, which are going from bad to worse. The paragraph concludes with inviting the attention of Nawab Mohsin-ul-mulk to the matter with a view to improve the existing state of affairs.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th November,
1906.

The students of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College Aligarh.

47. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th November, contains a letter purporting to have been addressed by Sir Saiyid Ahmad from Heaven to the students of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College at Aligarh wherein he deplores the existing state of things in the College, which is very different from what he aimed at during his lifetime. The dress adopted, the eagerness to secure Government appointments, the apathy to religion, and to the Muhammadan community, the attempt to abolish the pardah system, are things that have caused intense pain to his soul. The letter then points out that he expected the new generation to raise the community to a much higher level than the one in which he left it, but he has been sadly disappointed in them. He then points out that it is not yet too late, that they should look upon their worst enemies as their best friends, and that they should take to technical education and choose such professions for themselves as are calculated to do practical good to the community. He points out that foreign trade is the one cause of the poverty of India, that Europeans come out to this country with a view to earn money, while the Muhammadans not only do not follow their example, but also facilitate the drain of the wealth of the country by encouraging foreign manufactures. He concludes with pointing out that wealth is necessary to the material prosperity of the country, and exhorts them to go out to foreign countries to perfect themselves in arts and sciences, to earn money while abroad and to bring it to their country.

SURMA-I-ROZGAR, 16th November, 1906.

The Shia Muhammadans and boarding arrangements in the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

48. A correspondent in the Surma-i-Rozgar (Agra) of the 16th November, while referring to the reply sent by the Principal of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College informing a Shia student who wanted to join the institution that no separate boarding arrangements could be made for him, points out with regret that a large number of Shia students are under training in the College, and if they could only insist on having exclusive boarding arrangements, the Trustees would be bound to attend to their application. He concludes with inviting the attention of the Trustees of the College to the matter, and to see that necessary arrangements are made for students belonging to the Shia community.

KAYASTH HITKARI, 16th November, 1906.

The Muhammadan Conference, Aligarh.

49. A correspondent in the Káyasth Hitkári (Agra), of the 16th November, says that the subscriptions collected annually from almost every city and town by the Muhammadan Conference at Aligarh, are not utilized for the benefit of poor Muhammadans, nor is any practical effect given to the resolutions passed from year to year by the Conference.

Technical education.

50. The Surma-i-Rozgar (Agra), of the 16th November, expresses its appreciation of the aid given to certain private technical schools by the Government of Bombay, and suggests that the Governments of other Provinces and Presidencies should give similar encouragement to similar institutions within their local limits.

HINDOSTHAN, 18th November, 1906.

Technical education.

51. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 18th November, says that the system of education in the American Universities affords great facilities to the students for entering upon life as soon as they have completed their college career, and it is highly desirable that technical education should be given side by side with the training that Indian students receive at present in Indian Universities, on the same lines as in America. The editor suggests in its issue of the 20th November that the district boards all over India might with advantage follow the example of the district board in Madura in giving technical education.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 20th November, 1906.

Education in India.

52. The Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares) of the 20th November, says that the existing system of education is calculated to prepare students for government service, and to train their intellect but it has certain objectionable features which are deserving of notice and necessitate reform in the existing order of things. To begin with the frequent change of text-books prescribed tells very much on the purse of parents, the majority of whom are poor and live in an extremely impoverished country. The only persons who profit by these changes are the compilers of the books who grow rich at the public cost. Original text-books suited to the requirements of the times are seldom used, because the patronage for some reason or other is extended to a limited class of educationists; who manage to keep the monopoly to themselves, and to get the works of outsiders rejected regardless of their merits. Having secured the interest to themselves, they do not devote sufficient time and attention to their compilations. They are very often men of very inferior merit who are quite unfit for original work, and one need not go very far to test their merits, as they very often afford opportunities for doing so by writing keys, which clearly indicate that they themselves do not comprehend certain passages in the selections they make. Under such circumstances the one conclusion that follows is that the standard is made so high, that the average student finds it very difficult to grapple successfully with the work before him, fails to make any real progress in his education and is thus far inferior in merit to men who read up to same standard a few years back. There is at present not one book in the curriculum of studies, which could aid students in learning how to conduct themselves with etiquette and politeness. Students for the most part become ill-mannered, and devote themselves to political agitation, both of which are serious drawbacks to the formation of a noble character and to future well-being. As in English, so in Mathematics, Science and other subjects the existing standard is so high that it tends to turn clever boys into dullards. It is highly desirable that original works suited to the tastes and requirements of the time should be written and so adapted as to cultivate the morals of Indian youths. The matter deserves the serious attention of Government, of the educational authorities and of the text-book committee, who should give it their early consideration and initiate such reforms as are found necessary.

AL BASHIR,
20th November,
1906.

Hindi and Urdu.

53. The editor of Al Bashir while rejoicing in its issue of the 20th November, at the failure of the promoters of Hindi in inducing Government to issue a Hindi edition of the Government Gazette and circulars and orders, exhorts those interested in the Urdu language to keep up their efforts in spreading Urdu, and to do their best to raise it to the standard of the classical languages.

AL BASHIR,
20th November,
1906.

The opening ceremony of the Hindu Boarding House.

54. The editor of Al Bashir remarks in its issue of the 20th November, that the chairs at the opening ceremony of the Hindu Boarding House were placed on the naked floor and the address was handed over to His Honour Sir James Digges LaTouche without being put into a casket or other receptacle, which, if not due to the ignorance of those concerned, was an intentional insult to His Honour. He points out that the founders of the Boarding House are proud of the swadeshi movement and of the wisdom of their Rishis, and that, according to their ways of thinking, it would have been better if chairs had been dispensed with altogether, and the address had been written on leaves of the banyan tree.

ADVOCATE,
22nd November,
1906.

The B. A. Examination of the Allahabad University.

55. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 22nd November, says that " Michlet's Prècis de l'histoire moderne " is one of the history text-books prescribed for the next B. A. Examination. Messrs. Thacker and Co. and Ram Chandra Gobind and Sons of Bombay, when addressed have replied that the book is out of print. Will the University authorities be pleased to replace it by some other book more easily available at an early date.

He concludes with asking if it is too late, to reconsider the grouping of subjects and to allow candidates the option of offering any two subjects from group C as it stands, instead of handicapping them with group B.

OUDH PUNCH,
22nd November,
1906.

The Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental college at Aligarh.

56. A correspondent in the Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 22nd November, says that the hospital attached to the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, is a source of much dissatisfaction amongst students, that the arrangements were publicly denounced only last year at a large Muhammadan gathering at Lahore, that the medical man in charge is extremely incompetent and avaricious, that he extorts money and presents from students, takes undue advantage of the laxity of supervision, and does not hesitate to make use of the stock of medicines in the college, in his private practice. He then cites concrete instances where the treatment of the hospital assistant has done harm rather than good to certain students, suggests the appointment of a native physician, but is afraid that the European professors in the college will not approve of such a course, and concludes with the remark that Nawab Mohsin-ul-mulk is very kind to him, in spite of all his faults because he is constantly in attendance on the Nawab, and knows how to humour him. The accounts of the students likewise are maintained in a most disgraceful manner, fictitious bills are made out and large sums of money are realized from students and their guardians without the expenses having been actually incurred. Here again concrete instances are cited, where the deceit practised was brought to light and hushed up. The Suspense account particularly is a source of great annoyance and dissatisfaction. This branch of the accounts is simply unintelligible. Students are compelled to pay for their brothers and relations on the understanding that they left the college in debt, and no student has ever been able to clear his accounts so far, since no one will listen to any protests made against these demands, or give a satisfactory explanation of their genuineness; and those in charge of this branch likewise realize large sums from the guardians of students, and divert them to their private use. He then points out that the foreign office in the college is a very objectionable institution, and has victimized many students who have been compelled to leave the college on mere suspicion within twelve hours of notice being served on them. Finally he points out that Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk is opposed to the Congress movement, but the training that students receive in the college tends to lead them to deprecate selfishness and self-isolation from politics, and the autocratic views of the secretary can by no means check the craving for politics amongst the students. He concludes with the remark that the students of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College have the wellbeing of the Congress at heart, they know that Government respects its rights and just demands, and regard the opposition it receives from the College authorities as disgraceful. He points out that all leading Muhammadans sympathize with the Congress movement and its leaders, and ascribes the apathy and opposition of the Secretary and certain others who share his views to selfishness.

Export of grain from India.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th November,
1906.

57. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) of the 16th November, while appreciating the sympathy of Miss Gilbert, who suggested Government interference, in directing the sale of grain at fixed rates, points out that free trade, which leads to the export of grain from India, is the chief cause of the prevailing famine and of the growing poverty of the country, and suggests that it is highly desirable that measures should be taken to stop the export of grain.

(g).—General.

Europeans and Indians.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
7th November,
1906.

58. The Rafiq Punch (Moradabad), of the 7th November, while referring to the assault made by a European pleader on an Indian member of the Bar for expressing his disapprobation of certain questions put by the former, and to his subsequent apology to the latter, says that Europeans very often transgress the bounds of propriety and have to submit to the indignity of making apologies. The editor at the same time condemns the conduct of the native pleader in accepting the apology so readily.

Indians and Englishmen.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th November,
1906.

59. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) of the 16th November, says that the British Government should make education in India more liberal, that distinctions of creed and colour should not influence Englishmen in their dealings with Indians, and that such of them as are really deserving men should be allowed a share in the administration of the country. He suggests that Government should take care that it is not misled by the Anglo-Indian Press, that it should have recourse to Native papers in English for information, and that Englishmen should mould the thoughts of Indians by encouraging friendly visits and cultivating friendly relations with the Indians.

A murderous assault on certain Indian coolies by a European.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
15th November,
1906.

60. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 15th November, says that it appears from a paragraph reproduced from the Amrita Bazar Patrika, in the Nasim-i-Agra of the 11th November, that the police have hushed up a case of murderous assault on certain native coolies by a European employed on the East Indian Railway line, who lost his temper, and shot at the coolies who continued singing close to his quarters, when asked to desist. One of the coolies is said to have died on the spot, while the remaining two sustained serious injuries. The editor says that if this is a fact the matter should receive the consideration of Government.

The swadeshi movement.

INDIAN PUNCH,
12th November,
1906.

61. The Indian Punch (Budaun), of the 12th November, says that while addressing a meeting at Bombay, Mr. Tilak pointed out that the use of indigenous products is as natural to an Indian, as the use of his mother-tongue. He impressed on his audience the duty of promoting indigenous arts and manufactures, pointed out that God would show them no grace, if they proved false to their country, and exhorted them to boycott foreign articles in the interests of their country. The editor remarks that the advice no doubt is good, but it is to be feared that very few will act up to it.

JASUS,
14th November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

62. A correspondent in the Jásus (Agra) of the 14th November, says that the swadeshi movement is making very satisfactory progress in Lucknow, and congratulates Saiyid Amin Ali and Babu Banarsi Lal, at the success attending their efforts in this direction. The editor suggests that a further extension of trade in indigenous products is highly necessary with a view to meet public demand.

JASUS,
14th November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

63. The editor of the Jásus (Agra) of the 14th November, says that it is always very gratifying to him to hear of swadeshi firms and factories being started in the country by Indian capitalists. He is of opinion that firms owned exclusively by Englishmen are not properly speaking swadeshi firms, and points out that the fact of only two or three factories having been opened in Bengal ever since the partition of Bengal is highly discreditable to the Bengalis.

MUSAFIR,
15th November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

64. A correspondent in the Musafir (Agra), of the 15th November, complains of the exorbitant rates of certain swadeshi firms, which take very undue advantage of the growing tendency in favour of indigenous products and points out that such conduct is calculated to cripple the movement. The editor agrees with the correspondent in thinking that if the swadeshi movement is made a ground for swindling, the country is sure to suffer.

ARYA MITRA,
16th November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

65. The Arya Mitra (Agra) of the 16th November, quotes facts and figures from official reports which go to show that there has been a considerable fall in the value of Manchester piecegoods during the month of September 1906, compared with the figures for the same month in the previous year.

BHARAT JIWAN,
19th November,
1906.

A swadeshi meeting in Lahore.

66. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 19th November, expresses its approbation of the grand swadeshi meeting and the exhibition of Indian arts and manufactures held at Lahore on the 11th instant, and suggests the desirability of similar meetings being held in the United Provinces also.

BHARAT JIWAN
19th November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

67. A correspondent in the Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 19th November, appeals to the Indian public in behalf of swadeshi products, and exhorts them to devote themselves heart and soul to promoting indigenous arts and industries which are calculated to lead to the prosperity of the country.

Another correspondent expresses similar views, and appeals to his college friends to boycott foreign manufactures.

A third while pointing out that the average daily income of an Indian is only eleven pies according to Mr. Digby, expresses his extreme regret at the enormous drain of Indian wealth into foreign countries during the last hundred years, regards the import of foreign sugar as a fresh calamity to the country, and notes that, considering that it is refined by means of bovine blood and bone every Indian should abstain from its use as being against religious precepts.

OUDH AKHBAR,
20th November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement

68. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 20th November, says that the swadeshi movement is in no way sectarian, and there is no reason why it should meet with opposition from any quarter, unless the hostile attitude adopted is due to a desire to please a certain section of the Anglo-Indian community. It is the duty of Government to mark out a course, that should help it in protecting the interests of Englishmen and Indians alike. The editor suggests that the different communities inhabiting India should make common cause in promoting the swadeshi movement, and points out that there is nothing to indicate that the British Government is in the least inclined to discourage it. There are of course isolated instances of Europeans, who oppose the movement, but they cannot withstand the combined efforts of Hindus and Muhammadans, who however do not seem to realize that foreign trade has struck at the root of indigenous manufactures and led to the consequent poverty of the country. There is no reason why the Indians should not follow the example of their British rulers in encouraging country manufactures. He then points out that the Hindus are showing some signs of activity, but the Muhammadans have not yet shaken off their lethargy, and do not encourage swadeshi articles, though they are aware of the usefulness of the movement. They should be able to follow the noble example of the Arabs, who are ardent lovers of the products of their country. It is a matter for regret to learn that a Muhammadan chief in Kathiawar has announced publicly that indigenous products should be discarded in favour of foreign articles. The swadeshi movement however is irresistible, and it is therefore desirable that all racial and religious differences should be laid aside, and that both Hindus and Muhammadans should unite and make a vow to refrain from the use of foreign articles. They should make up their minds to purchase indigenous products in preference to articles of foreign manufacture, even if the former are more costly than the latter, and it will be not long before the prices of foreign and indigenous products are the same.

Foreign sugar.

BHARAT JIWAN,
19th November,
1906.

69. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of the 19th November, says that the residents of Benares have at a meeting held recently resolved to boycott foreign sugar altogether, and about three thousand Brahmins have made a vow to refuse to attend feasts where foreign sugar is used in the preparation of sweetmeats and other articles of food.

The Coronation of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji.

OUDH PUNCH,
22nd November,
1906.

70. A correspondent in the Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 22nd November, indulges in sarcasm while referring to the coronation of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji, points out that the coronation was informal as foreign Powers were not duly apprized of it, but king Edward will all the same be relieved of a good deal of his responsibility. He concludes with thanking God that the Muhammadans are not amongst his followers and subjects, and hopes that they will hold themselves aloof from the agitation of their Hindu brethren.

The partition of Bengal.

OUDH AKHBAR,
20th November,
1906.

71. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 20th November says that Mr. Morley has given out that the difficulties that will be entailed by any attempt at setting aside the partition of Bengal will far exceed the mischief that has been done, if any. It is quite possible that Mr. Morley has been misled by certain Anglo-Indian papers, and has formed a wrong opinion on the subject, but there is at the same time no reason why he should regard the action taken by Lord Curzon and Sir Bampfylde Fuller as meaningless. The Bengali Press has no weight, and it is difficult to say if the representations made therein ever reach Government; but it is a matter for rejoicing that the Bengalis are as assiduous as they were in demanding the cancellation of the partition, This devotion leads one to hope that they will one day succeed in their efforts.

Union between Hindus and Muhammadans.

MUSAFIR,
15th November,
1906.

72. The Musafir (Agra) of the 15th November eulogizes the Bengalis for the political life they have infused in India, but deprecates their persistent efforts at effecting union between Hindus and Muhammadans, in spite of the clear expression of opinion on the part of the latter, that they wish to hold themselves aloof from the Hindus. He also refers to the conduct of the Bengali Head-Master of Budaun, who behaved in a most reprehensible manner in closing the students club attached to the High school, which has been in existence for the last sixteen years, on the ground that certain Muhammadan students have during the last year or two treated it as a sectarian institution as its anniversary is celebrated on the occasion of the Devali festival. The editor remarks that the District Magistrate gave every possible encouragement to the students, and consented to preside at the meeting, but the Head-Master stood in the way of this annual celebration, merely because certain Muhammadan students had adopted a hostile attitude. In conclusion he expresses a hope that the District Magistrate will enquire into the matter.

The present relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

RIYAZ-UL AKHBAR,
16th November,
1906.

73. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 16th November, reproduces a letter from Major Saiyid Husain of Bilgram, published in the London Times, wherein he reiterates the views of Sir Saiyid Ahmad, that Government by representation will prove injurious to the Muhammadans, so long as it is based on the opinion of a combined majority of Hindus and Muhammadans. The Major then says that Sir Saiyid knew that the Hindus made professions of friendship then (as they do now) with a view to secure the co-operation of Muhammadans in promoting their political interests; and concludes with expressing his regret at the folly of certain Muhammadans, who are making common cause with the Hindus, and seem to be impressed with the sincerity of their professions.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
16th November,
1906.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

74. The Shahna-i Hind (Meerut), of the 16th November, while criticising the views expressed by a Hindu correspondent in the Pioneer of the 25th October, says that, if the Hindus had even a spark of sense in them, they would urge that the Muhammadans should have their rights just the same as they have theirs; instead of pointing out that they ask for exceptional distinction and favours on the ground of their "political importance and the value of the contribution which they make to the defence of the Empire." The editor assures the Hindus that Government does not wish to show any exceptional favours to the Muhammadans, and that it does not disapprove of the swadeshi movement. He deplores the attempt each community is making to disparage the other, and says that the mutual attacks must be a source of gratification to the selfish Anglo-Indians who are benefited by the existing strained relations between the Hindus and the Muhammadans.

AGRA AKHBAR,
21st November,
1906.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

75. A correspondent in the Agra Akhbar of the 21st November, while reviewing the various Muhammadan Powers in the world, says that numerically the Muhammadans exceed every other nation in the world, that the various Muhammadan powers are beginning to awaken and improve their social and political status in the scale of nations, and that the Muhammadans of India, though they hold no political position, are a power to be reckoned with. He then points out that if low class Hindus, who have no political significance are left out of consideration the numerical strength of Hindus and Muhammadans will be found to be equal; that it is true that the rights of Muhammadans are being trampled over in the interests of the Hindus, but it is not a fact that Government is quite unmindful of Muhammadans. He concludes with the remark that the Muhammadans of India have the privilege of living close to Persia, Afghanistan, Jedda, Aden &c., and that the one bond of kalma is quite enough to unite them with one another, if occasion should arise; the Hindus therefore should not be proud of their political significance as compared with that of Muhammadans. The Muhammadans of India are no doubt steeped in poverty yet they are a warlike nation, their co-religionists are spread far and wide, and other Muhammadans will no doubt intercede in their behalf with Government if they persevere in demanding their rights and privileges.

OUDH AKHBAR,
22nd November,
1906.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

76. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 22nd November while referring to an assault made by certain Muhammadans of Sirajganj on a Maulvi, who tried to promote the swadeshi movement, and to the institution of proceedings against a Bengali in Mymensingh under section 295, I. P. C., on a charge of demolishing a Muhammadan shrine and building a temple of Kali in its place, says that illwill is being fomented between Hindus and Muhammadans in Bengal. The Press in Bengal likewise is loud in denouncing Government officials for trying to widen the gulf between the two communities. The editor quotes instances from history during the Moghul period, and points out that the extinction of the dynasty was brought about ultimately by disunion, and exhorts both Hindus and Muhammadans to lay aside all racial differences, and to unite in promoting the interests of the country.

AL BASHIR,
20th November,
1906.

Hindus and Aryas.

77. The editor of Al Bashir (Etawah) while referring in its issue of the 20th November to the views of the Prakash, an Arya paper, which announced that the Aryas and Hindus are two different nations, remarks that if the two communities can agree in accepting the views propounded in the Prakash, all ill-feeling between the Hindus and the Muhammadans will come to an end, since it is the Aryas who have done all in their power to strike at the root of the Muhammadan religion, to injure Muhammadan interests and to create an impassable gulf between the Hindus and the Muhammadans, by reminding the former of the religious oppression of the Muhammadans. He then points out that the relations between Hindus and Muhammadans were very friendly before the Dayanand mission began to influence the public mind, and reminds the Hindus of the attacks of the Aryas on their form of worship and their religion, and concludes with the remark that though some political differences will exist, all the same between the Hindus and the Muhammadans even after it has been settled that the former are a distinct entity from the Aryas, yet the differences will be inconsiderable.

JASUS,
14th November, 1906.

Proposal to start a Muhammadan religious organ.

78. The editor of the Jásus (Agra) of the 14th November, points out the urgency of starting a religious organ to meet the attacks of the Aryas on Islam, and expresses his willingness to undertake to issue a paper to be called the Sarkob from the 1st of January next, if he can secure two hundred subscribers to begin with. He concludes with the hope that those having even a spark of love for Islam will subscribe to this paper at their earliest possible convenience.

MUSAFIR,
15th November, 1906.

The morals of Muhammadans.

79. The Musafir (Agra) of the 15th November, quotes figures from Al Islam (Aligarh) taken from the last Annual Report of the administration of Jails in India which points out that the Jail population in India consists of 641 Muhammadans out of every one thousand criminals undergoing sentences in jails. The editor remarks that this is a clear indication of the moral turpitude of the Muhammadans. He points out that the bulk of prostitutes, of pimps, dancing-boys and men employed to play in the bands are Muhammadans; that Al-Islam invites the attention of leading and learned Muhammadans to the facts noted and exhorts them to raise the moral tone of the community as a whole. He attributes the existing state of affairs to the Muhammadan religion itself, which preaches a very low standard of morality, and concludes with exhorting the Muhammadans to improve their moral status so as to escape the attacks of their opponents.

ARYA MITRA,
16th November, 1906.

The prosperity of India.

80. The Arya Mitra (Agra) of the 16th November, says that Indians are advancing money to Government at low interest instead of laying it out in the organization of factories and promoting commerce, like Englishmen. The editor points out that the material prosperity of the country depends entirely on the commercial instincts of a nation, and it is highly desirable that Indians should take to trade as far as possible.

JASUS,
14th November, 1906.

Pandit Jwala Prasad, District Magistrate of Etah, and Diwan Tekchand, Deputy Commissioner of Ludhiana.

81. The Jásus (Agra) of 14th November, says that the prejudicial attitude evinced by Pandit Jwala Prasad, District Magistrate of Etah, and Diwan Tekchand of Ludhiana, is calculated to widen the gulf between Hindus and Muhammadans.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
16th November, 1906.

Indian rule in Ludhiana and Etah.

82. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad) of the 16th November, says that the Muhammadans of Ludhiana who are tired of Diwan Tek Chand's administration of the district owing to his racial likes and dislikes, went the length of posting up a placard written in bold letters, at a prominent place on the way taken by His Honour Sir Charles Rivaz, on the occasion of his recent visit to Ludhiana. The placard contained a request to save the Muhammadans from Native Government, and they had mustered strong at the place where it had been posted up, indicating thereby that they were extremely aggrieved, and protested in silence against the prejudicial administion of Diwan Tek Chand with which they could not put up any longer. The editor asks if the memorial referred to in the Pioneer was presented to His Honour, and if so, with what result. He then says that Pandit Jwala Prasad, the District Magistrate of Etah, likewise is charged with being influenced by racial feelings in the discharge of his public duties, and that nothing has been done to rebut the complaints made against him so far in Muhammadan newspapers, beyond an attempt on the part of certain Congress organs to dilate on his educational qualifications and goodness generally, as they have done in the case of Diwan Tek Chand, the Deputy Commissioner of Ludhiana. He concludes with the remark that a political union between Hindus and Muhammadans can in no way be calculated to do any good to the latter, who find themselves compelled to prefer European officers to their Hindu brethren, as the latter cannot overcome their racial feelings in administering public justice between Hindus and Muhammadans.

RISALA-I-ZAMINDAR-WA-KASHTKAR,
October, 1906.

Rasad arrangements during the touring season.

83. The Risala-i-Zamindár-wa-Káshtkár (Bijnor), for October, invites the attention of Government to the hardships to which zamindars, tenants and banias are subjected during the camping season, and suggests the desirability of strenuous measures being taken with a view to redress their grievances in connection with supplies, and to abolish the begar system completely.

ALMORA AKHBAR,
31st October, 1906.

Forest rules and regulations in the United Provinces.

84. The Almora Akhbár of the 31st October, invites the attention of the Local Government to the existing forest rules and regulations, which cause much public inconvenience and give forest officers many opportunities of oppressing the public on very trifling grounds. The editor expresses a hope that His Honour will relax the rules after due consideration before he leaves these Provinces.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
15th November, 1906.

Bribery.

85. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 15th November, says that as the chief cause of corruption amongst Indians lies in the low salaries they receive, and the permanent prevalence of famine prices throughout the country. The editor remarks that living has become very expensive, and the earnings of its several members can hardly suffice to sustain a family which could formerly live on the earnings of one man.

MUSAFIR,
15th November, 1906.

Rubber cultivation.

86. The Musáfir (Agra), of the 15th November remarks that a correspondent in the London Daily News, says that at least ten black men are sacrificed in the manufacture of every ton of rubber. The editor says that if such is the case it is very horrible and distressing.

MUFID-I-AM,
16th November, 1906.

Local Press Conference.

87. The Mufid-i-Ám (Agra), of the 16th November, approves of the suggestion made by the editor of the Jásus (Agra) for organizing a local Press Conference since a Central Press Conference is quite out of the question at present. The editor expresses a hope that, if his local contemporaries take sufficient interest in the matter, their efforts will be crowned with success, and productive of beneficial results.

ADVOCATE,
18th November, 1906.

Race distinction in the public service.

88. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 18th November, says that it has more than once given expression in its editorial columns to the widespread complaint that undue favour is shown to Eurasians and domiciled Europeans in the matter of appointments and promotions in the public service.

* * * * * * *

It is an open secret that clerical appointments in some large offices, transfers from unhealthy to healthy places, are actually purchased by candidates and for substantial prices, and that the recipients of these ill-gotten gains live in a style which costs far more than their legitimate incomes.

* * * * * * *

The corruption complained of can be stopped to a great extent if Government will pass stringent orders that no one but a Gazetted Officer of tried probity is allowed to formulate or suggest proposals for making appointments, promotions, and transfers in any office or service. It will be a great advance in the direction of administrative purity if Collectors, Commissioners, Heads of Departments, Secretaries of Government in large public offices, Superintending Engineers, and all other officers who have the control of large establishments are required by standing orders not to allow their Personal Assistants, Head Clerks, Head Assistants, Superintendents or Registrars to have any hand in proposals concerning appointments and promotions.

HINDOSTHAN,
21st November, 1906.

Sir James Digges LaTouche and the Rajput Maha Sabha deputation.

89. A correspondent in the English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 21st November, remarks as follows with reference to His Honour's reply to the Rajput Maha Sabha deputation:—We fight against ignorance, but His Honour has confused the real fact. He should have said "fight against the ignorance of the masses," but His Honour should not have made such a sweeping remark which seems to mean that all Rajputs are ignorant. Or, at least, it is a sweeping remark inasmuch as that it does not define the limit. It should have shown the extent of ignorance. Are all the three millions ignorant, or is there any honourable exception too? In the same manner, our social customs should have been explained and the nature of injury defined. We should have also liked to know how we have become idle and extravagant.

The Arbuthnot failure.

ADVOCATE,
22nd November,
1906.

90. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 22nd November, says that it is as well that the Arbuthnot failure should open the eyes of Indian depositors to deal with such private or public banks only as have their dealings confined to India. The Government of Madras at the last meeting of the Legislative Council did not choose to reply to many interpolations put by anxious members. We have, however, a right to know what the Government are going to do with Sir George Arbuthnot and his agents. Will the gentleman be allowed to enjoy his knighthood as a magnet in the suburbs of London, and not be made to share the miseries of the unfortunate men who confided everything that they had in his firm and whom he so cruelly betrayed?

V.—LEGISLATION.

Amendment of the Civil Procedure Code.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
15th November,
1906.

91. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 15th November, says that the position of the plaintiff in civil cases is at present most unenviable, and the procedure for his guidance is almost ruinous. There is nothing to guarantee payment even if he can secure a decree after protracted litigation. The editor suggests that now that a fresh bill of the code is before the public, it is extremely desirable that steps should be taken to improve the existing state of affairs which is highly discreditable to the administration of justice in civil courts.

Counterfeiting coins.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
15th November,
1906.

92. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 15th November, upholds the views expressed by certain of its contemporaries regarding the equalization of the coins to their value in silver so as to enable Government to exercise an effective check over the offence of counterfeiting.

Protection of ancestral estates in the Province of Agra.

RIYAZ-UL AKHBAR,
16th November,
1906.

93. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 16th November, says that the memorial presented to His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces by the zamindars of the Province of Agra with a view to secure hereditary estates in that province, against transfer and partition on the same lines as in Oudh, had not been prepared with due care and attention. It was manifest from certain errors that had crept into the memorial that the scheme had not been duly circulated beyond certain local limits, nor had it been sufficiently discussed before taking the form of a memorial. The ruin of certain prosperous families was ascribed to partitions, and inter-partitions, and to their extravagance, but these by themselves cannot be regarded as sufficiently strong motives to warrant legislation. Western education does not support the view that the position of a family leader will be strengthened by vesting the entire family property in one man. Experience shows that respect shown on grounds of seniority disappears as the degree of affinity becomes more and more removed, and that attempts at uniting distant members of family on grounds of affinity alone leads to unhappiness. The joint family system again tends to destroy the spirit of self-exertion and ambition. The editor then points out that the Act governing the transfers of property in the Punjab cannot on principle be made applicable to the estates in the Province of Agra, and that the system adopted in Oudh where estates devolve on the eldest-born son can, under no circumstances, be enforced in the sister province, as succession there is governed on different principles, and any legislation on the subject will give rise to endless litigation. He then concludes with suggesting that the memorialists would have done well to read Sir Henry Bolton's New India before going up to His Honour with the memorial.

Summary powers of Magistrates.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
19th November,
1906.

94. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 19th November, says that summary powers should not as a rule be conferred except on the recommendation of the High Court: and then only on such Magistrates as have very heavy files, and cannot get through their work without trying certain cases summarily. The editor is of opinion that accused persons should invariably be served with a notice before they are summoned to stand on their trial, so that they may have an opportunity to meet the charge laid at their door; and also that sentences of three months should be made appealable.

VI.—Railway.

SITARA-I-HIND,
12th November,
1906.

Catering arrangements on the Southern-Mahratta Railway.

95. The Sitára-i-Hind (Moradabad), of the 12th November, commends Mr. Wright's scheme of attaching dining cars to certain trains running between Poona and Bangalore, and eulogizes him for the care he has evinced in looking to the comforts of Hindu passengers by providing bath-rooms and making necessary arrangements for the observance of the pardah system for respectable females. The catering arrangements will be entirely in the hands of high class Brahmins, and hot food with a variety of dishes will be always available. Other necessary articles of food will be purchased from Brahmin shop-keepers of Poona and Bangalore.

JASUS,
14th November,
1906.

Catering arrangements on the Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway.

96. A correspondent in the Jásus (Agra) of the 14th November, invites the attention of the Railway Board to the unsatisfactory catering arrangements on the Rohilkhand and Kumaun Railway when the rates of articles supplied are exorbitant, and suggests the desirability of early steps being taken to remedy the existing evils as has recently been done on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway. He further asks the editors of the Arya Patra and the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) to take up the matter.

GAZETTE,
15th November,
1906.

Catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

97. A correspondent in the Cawnpore Gazette of the 15th November, says that his calling necessitates constant travelling, and he can therefore assert with confidence that the existing arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway are far superior to those on several other lines, where passengers have to submit very often to privations and hardships. He points out that a reversion to the old order of things will bring the old evils in its train, and asks the Railway authorities to reconsider the matter, and to allow the existing arrangements to continue.

Another correspondent says from personal experience that the charges against the contractor in connection with the catering arrangements and with the levy of unauthorized tolls on bridges on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway are false.

OUDH PUNCH,
22nd November,
1906.

Catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

98. A correspondent in the Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 22nd November, suggests that a reversion to the old order of things in connection with catering arrangements is quite out of the question, that a dining car if attached to the railway trains will not supply the wants of the bulk of passengers, who cannot overcome their religious prejudices, and points out in conclusion the desirability of the railway authorities allowing the existing arrangements under the contract system to continue with such modifications as may be deemed necessary.

JASUS,
14th November,
1906.

Complaints regarding the conduct of coolies on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

99. The Jásus (Agra), of the 14th November, invites the attention of Traffic Superintendents to the exorbitant demands of coolies on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, who try to force passengers to pay more than six pies per bundle, and concludes with the hope that steps will be taken to ensure that they do not extort more than the fixed rates already in existence.

SULAIMANI
AKHBAR,
20th November,
1906.

Ticket-Collectors.

100. A correspondent in the Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares), of the 20th November, complains bitterly against ticket-collectors in general, and remarks that their conduct is extremely over-bearing towards the travelling public irrespective of the position in life that passengers occupy. He complains of their extortion, inequable temper and inattention to passengers.

VII.—Post Office.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
7th November,
1906.

The Postal Department.

101. The Rafiq Punch (Moradabad), of the 7th November, while expressing its gratification at the promotions given to employés in the various grades of the Postal department, remarks that considering the work they do and the responsibilities placed on them they are deserving of further promotions, which if given will be a source of much satisfaction.

CITIZEN,
12th November,
1906.

The Postal Department in India.

102. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), says in its issue of the 12th November, that the public are no doubt thankful to the Postal authorities for the concessions made by them, but we think it is time that the latter turned their attention towards making their post cards of the same size as those of private manufacture, as well as turning out more decent envelopes priced half anna each, besides raising the limit of the weight in the case of a letter carried for ½ an anna to a full tola. These improvements would no doubt necessitate a little extra expenditure, but while it would be a mere bagatelle in the case of a Department that makes large profits from year to year, it would unquestionably afford further facilities to the people at large.

* * * * * * *

The Postal authorities have, he says, lately enhanced the limit from four to six tolas of a registered newspaper carried for quarter of an anna, while the limit has been fixed at twenty tolas for half an anna. It is a well-known fact that the proprietors of the majority of the native newspapers in consequence of this restriction are seriously hampered in making them more useful by increasing the size.

* * * * * * *

In conclusion he urges upon the authorities concerned to at least raise the limit of weight for newspapers carried by post from one place to another for one pice from 6 to 10 tolas.

AL ISLAM,
16th November,
1906.

The Postal Guide.

103. A correspondent in Al Islám (Aligarh), of the 16th November, says that it is highly desirable that a translation of the Postal Guide should invariably be published in Urdu for public information and guidance. The editor says that the Postal authorities will in due time find it a source of profit, though it may not be so for some time to come.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

OUDH AKHBAR,
22nd November,
1906.

The celebration of the reign of Akhbar.

104. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 22nd November, while referring to the proposed celebration of the reign of Akhbar with a view to cement the relations between Hindus and Muhammadans, says that the very proposal that the Hindus should have a separate circle of their own though seated alongside of members of other communities, is injurious to the idea of promoting social union, that the Indians will take at least another fifty years before they can eat and drink freely with one another, and that any attempt at annihilating racial and religious distinction is an attempt to break the laws of nature. The Indians should aim at union in temporal matters only, as free eating and drinking cannot by itself efface all racial distinctions, as is proved by the differences between shias and sunnis. In fact observance of differences is in the very nature of man.

OUDH PUNCH,
22nd November,
1906.

The influence of (Naturalism) Sir Saiyid Ahmad and his followers.

105. A correspondent in the Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 22nd November, says that the influence of (Nature) Sir Saiyid Ahmad has led to the abolition of the pardah system, has given a death-blow to the Muhammadan religion, and has introduced quite a new fashion of dress amongst Muhammadans, who are adopting Western ways and manners and are beginning to despise their fathers.

I.—POLITICS.

(a).—Foreign.

The European Press and the Sultan of Turkey.

AL ISLAM,
23rd November,
1906.

1. THE Al Islam (Aligarh) of the 23rd November, says that the European Press is ever forward in detracting from the merits of the Sultan of Turkey and in circulating stories about him, that would tend to lower him in the public estimation. The articles regarding his illness if collected and published in pamphlet form will furnish various amusing versions, and will prove beyond all doubt that Europeans excel the Indians in inventing lies, though Lord Curzon said that this was a characteristic of Indians alone. The editor concludes with noting the story put in circulation by a French paper, wherein it is made out that the Sultan's ailment is due to his having been shot by one of his jealous wives, who felt that His Majesty's regard for her was not as loving as it was in the past.

The Egyptian University.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th November,
1906.

2. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 26th November, expresses its regret at finding that the Times thinks that the Egyptian University if established, will tend to weaken the influence of the British Government.

New era in Persia.

EXPRESS,
29th November,
1906.

3. The Express (Lucknow) of the 29th November, says that a new political era has dawned in Persia with the opening of the National Assembly. It clearly shows that the Persian people really and earnestly desire to advance in the way of modern European culture, and, conscious of the threatening danger of political annihilation, are earnestly seeking means whereby to avert the impending disaster. Possessing men of the highest intellectual attainments, Persia with a working capital which will no doubt be soon extended, will be soon able to change those deeply rooted evils which have considerably hindered her hitherto, and will enable her to emerge from difficulties which to-day encompass her on all sides. His Imperial Majesty the Shah of Persia, while congratulating the people at the opening of the National Assembly, pointed out that the new form of Government was calculated to place the friendly relations between the people and the state on a firm basis. He exhorted Government officials in various grades to try their utmost to carry out necessary reforms for the safety and peace of the country. He asked the representatives of the people to do all that is good and beneficial to the state, and inculcated prudence and unselfishness in the performance of their duties. He exhorted them to serve the people and the state with perfect sincerity and good faith, and to keep aloof from such actions as would lead to disturbance. The editor remarks that the Shah himself feels very keenly the importance of the co-operation which his subjects might offer to him as menbers of the National Council, and it is a very hopeful sign of the future prosperity of Persia. He points out that the regeneration of Persia requires time, money and labour, that retrenchment carried out vigorously in all the departments ofthe state might do away with the necessity of raising small foreign loans, and suggests that at the present moment a foreign loan might retard the progress of reform and bind Government hand and foot.

(b).—Home.

The Indian National Congress.

BARANASI,
20th November,
1906.

4. The Baranasi (Benares) of the 20th November, points out that the questions of National education and the development of the economic and industrial life of the people should form the all absorbing topics of discussion at the ensuing session of the National Congress.

The Muhammadans and the Indian National Congress.

RAHBAR,
21st November,
1906.

5. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st November, points out the desirability of friendly relations being established between Hindus and Muhammadans. The editor points out that the bulk of Muhammadans are not opposed to the Indian National Congress, and that the ultimate effect of the Muhammadan deputation will be to favour the cause of the National Congress.

The Indian National Congress.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
23rd November,
1906.

6. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 23rd November, approves of the views expressed by the Bengalee, regarding the need for a reform in the existing programme of the Indian National Congress. The editor is of opinion that the Indians should take education entirely into their own hands, that technical education should be attended to duly, and that district political associations should be formed throughout the country, with a view to control the progress of education and of indigenous industries, which are essential to the political development of a nation. The editor says that every attempt is being made at present to injure the cause of the country; it is therefore highly desirable that the Indians should lay aside all racial prejudices, and co-operate in promoting Indian interests.

CITIZEN,
26th November,
1906.

The Barisal Conference assault case.

7. The editor of the Citizen (Allahabad), while referring to the Barisal Conference assault case in its issue of the 26th November, offers the following comment:—We feel it our duty to enlighten the responsible authorities that the people of the new Province, or for the matter of that of all India, have lost all faith in the administration of justice when the case is between an Indian and a European or a Government servant, and that the feeling that it is mere dissipation of energy to go to the Law Court for a mock trial is a general one. There are of course individual exceptions; and generalities are always dangerous. But we represent, we fear, the present attitude of the Indian mind, when we make the above statement.

ANAND,
20th November,
1906.

The formation of a separate Council for Irishmen.

8. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 20th November, says that Irishmen have eventually succeeded in having a separate Council of their own through their strenuous and persistent efforts, but the Indians remain where they were. This the editor says is due to the fact that they vary their programme from year to year.

JASUS,
21st November,
1906.

Self-Government in India and Transvaal.

9. The Jasus (Agra) of the 21st November, while referring to the turbulence of the Boers, asks what guarantee Government has of their living peacefully after self-government has been conferred on them. The editor remarks that Government would do well to confer the boon on the Indians, whose conduct in the past has given ample proofs of their loyalty, and who will no doubt remain equally loyal in the future.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th November,
1906.

Representative form of Government in India.

10. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 26th November, while referring to the institution of a representative form of Government in various Asiatic countries, says that India should not expect to have this boon conferred, so long as the various communities inhabiting the country are not welded into one homogeneous whole. The editor points out that Indians must cease to be a nation of sycophants, and abject slaves to officialdom before they can expect to command any respect. They should act disinterestedly in the interests of the country without being in the least influenced by racial likes and dislikes, and both Hindus and Muhammadans should co-operate in bringing about the regeneration of India, without which no amount of platform oratory will do any good to the country.

ZAMANA,
October, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

11. A correspondent in the Zamana (Cawnpore) for October, says that the members of the Muhammadan deputation belonged mostly to what may aptly be called the Aligarh school. It is very much to be regretted that the deputation as a body should endeavour to keep the Muhammadan community quite aloof from the Hindus in political matters, and it is to be feared that such a course might lead the Hindus to think that even the leaders of Muhammadan thought and opinion are opposed to union and co-operation. The deputation aims at certain appointments and seats in the councils, and considering that its aims are selfish and limited to the wellbeing of the Muhammadan community only it dwindles into insignificance when compared with the National Congress, which has universal philanthropic objects wherein is involved the common good of Hindus and Muhammadans. There is no doubt that Government gives credit for ability and personal merit and the Muhammadans should be ashamed of asking for recognition on racial considerations.

INSTITUTE
GAZETTE,
28th November,
1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

12. The Institute Gazette (Aligarh), publishes in its issue of the 28th November, a note by the Hon'ble Sardar Muhammad Yakub Khan wherein he explains how Muhammadans might obtain due representation in its true sense in the Legislative Councils. The Hon'ble Sardar points out that the Muhammadan deputation principally asked for two things :—First, that in Legislative bodies, as well as in local bodies in which representation is obtained by means of election, the number of Muhammadan representatives should be first fixed by the Government, not only in consideration of their numerical proportion, but of their political importance also. Secondly, that with a view to render election of Muhammadans possible Muhammadan voters should be allowed to elect their own representatives separately.

* * * * * * *

It may be added that the Memorial has further made clear that appointment by nomination is neither representation in its true sense, nor satisfactory and fair to the interests of the community.

* * * * * * *

The Taluka Board is formed of the representatives of the different groups situated in the Taluka, as well as of nominated members whose number is generally equal to the elected members. Then this combined body, namely the Taluka Board consisting of elected as well as nominated members, sits to elect one representative for the District Local Board. This latter Board consists of as many elected representatives as there are Taluka Boards in the district, and so many nominated members besides. It need hardly be repeated that from a general list of electorate consisting of a majority of others, it is impossible for Muhammadans to obtain due representation whether in Municipalities or Taluka or District Boards. I may further casually remark here, that the election by Taluka Boards for a seat in the District Board, is not a typically popular election because half the members in the Taluka Boards are not representative of the people, being nominees of the Government. I mention this point here because it appears to me to be certain that the present local laws prescribing the methods of election will be altered, so this fact which is obviously inconsistent with true representation may attract notice when the acts are amended.

* * * * * * *

In Municipalities and Taluka Boards, where the Muhammadan population is more than 10 per cent, the Muhammadan electors should be allowed to elect their own representatives, and they should be divided (territorially or otherwise) into as many groups as the number of representatives are allotted to the community, in consideration of their numerical proportion and political importance etc. In like manner the Muhammadan members of the Taluka Local Boards should be allowed to elect as many representatives for the District Board as may be allotted to the community. The Muhammadan voters of the district should for this purpose be divided (territorially or otherwise) into a number of groups equal to the number of representatives allotted to the community on the District Board. In the same manner the Muhammadan members of the District Local Boards and large Municipalities should be allowed to elect as many representatives for the Provincial Legislative Council as will be allotted to the community, and they should be divided into as many groups (by districts and municipalities) as will be equal to the number of representatives allotted to the community for the Provincial Council. In the same manner the elected Muhammadan members of the Provincial Council should be allowed to elect as many Muhammadan members for the Viceregal Council as will be allotted to the community, and for this purpose more provinces than one may be grouped together when necessary.

* * * * * * *

He is strongly of opinion, that in India, in order to guard the interests of the minority there should be a special provision in every enactment embodying the principle of self-government. The special provision should be that in any Municipality or Local Board if two-thirds of the members belonging to one community or such number of the people of that community as may appear to be sufficient, represent in writing that, on account of the numerical preponderance of votes of the stronger community, their interests have been prejudiced by any decision affecting their religious sentiments or vital interests, the Government or the Commissioner of the division should have power to stay the operation of the decision, and to pass such orders as may appear fit and just.

This is supported by a Resolution of the Indian National Conference held under the presidentship of Mr. Budruddin Tayabjai, in which the Congress have held the principle that in cases when all Muhammadans jointly oppose any decision, that decision will not be operative, or will be cancelled.

In Municipalities and Local Boards where the population of Muhammadans is less than a tenth, Government may, if it considers that the trouble in altering the system of electing will not be commensurable with the object, direct that no change be made, and that the interests of the minority be safeguarded by nomination and by the provision mentioned in the foregoing paragraph.

The privileges which are desired to be obtained for the Muhammadan community, may certainly be granted to any other community such as Parsis or Native Christians or Sikhs, in localities where their numerical strength is not less than one-tenth, provided they choose to profit by this provision.

JASUS,
21st November,
1906.

The deputation from Indian colonists to Lord Elgin.

13. The Jasus (Agra) of the 21st November, while referring to the deputation from Indian colonists that waited on Lord Elgin, says that his Lordship's lip sympathy will not stand the Indians in good stead, and points out that the British Government is not prepared to interfere on behalf of the Indians, as it is afraid of the turbulence of the people of Transvaal. The editor expresses his deep sympathy with Indians who are maltreated in a foreign land where they have been compelled to go to seek a precarious livelihood.

MURAQQA-I-TASAUAR,
7th November,
1906.

Colonists and Indians.

14. The Muraqqa-i-Tasauar (Fatehpur), of the 7th November, received on 26th November, regrets to find that the Indians are looked upon with contempt by the colonists in Vancouver, Canada and Australia, and as unfit for anything but employment as labourers in Mauritius and Trinidad. The editor is of opinion that Englishmen must learn to sympathize with Indians, if they wish the latter to love and respect them.

BHARAT JIWAN,
26th November
1906.

Indians and colonists.

15. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of the 26th November, feels much aggrieved at the exclusion of Indians from English colonies, while Englishmen themselves do not hesitate to make profit from India by selling their manufactures at exorbitant prices.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
27th November,
1906.

Colonies and the Indians.

16. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 27th November, regrets to find that English colonists seem to have a universal hatred against Indians. The editor says that love alone can beget love, and that Englishmen cannot expect Indians to love them or to have any sympathy for them, unless their feelngs are reciprocated by the ruling race. Genuine sympathy is a quality that the British cannot and should not expect from the Indians if they make a wrong use of power to keep possession of the country that chance put into their hands. He instances that a number of Indians who had gone to Vancouver in search of employment had to return without landing there. Indians are not allowed to enter Canada and Australia and they are treated no better than dogs in South Africa.

The Cawnpore Gazette of the 23rd November, likewise deplores the unfriendly attitude of European colonists towards Indians.

UNION GAZETTE,
21st November,
1906.

The prosecution of the Punjabi.

17. The Union Gazette (Bareilly) of the 21st November, while referring to the prosecution of the Punjabi, points out that the Press in India does not exert any appreciable influence on the public mind, and that any attempt to put offending papers to expense with a view to bring their existence to an end is very unworthy of Government. Prosecutions of native papers should therefore be as few as possible.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

EXPRESS,
22nd November,
1906.

Increase of pay in the Amir's army.

18. The Express (Lucknow), of the 22nd November, says that it is reported that the Amir is considerably reducing his army by discharging many inefficient soldiers, and is thus meeting the monthly increment of four rupees (Kabuli) which is being given to the sepoys. Nasr-ullah Khan, the Amir's brother and Commander-in-Chief of the troops, and General Amir Muhammad Khan are supervising the preparation of lists of the men discharged and retained.

JASUS,
21st November, 1906.

Rise of rates of grain in Agra.

19. The Jásus (Agra) of the 21st November, says that the stringent measures taken by the District Magistrate of Agra to prevent the abnormal rise in the prices of grain owing to the ensuing darbar have been a source of great public satisfaction.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
24th November, 1906.

The visit of the Amir of Kabul.

20. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 24th November, says that the ensuing visit of the Amir of Kabul will lead to very useful results, and will facilitate the moral and social progress of the Afghans who are at present a savage people.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
26th November, 1906.

The visit of the Amir of Kabul.

21. The editor of the Awaza-i-Khalq, 26th November, regrets to notice that the expenditure incurred during the ensuing visit of the Amir of Kabul will have to be borne by India.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th November, 1906.

The Amir's visit to Dehli.

22. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 26th November, invites the attention of Government to the great hardships to the Delhi public, due to dearness of grain and other articles, owing to the impending visit of the Amir of Kabul, and suggests the desirability of its taking necessary steps to import provisions from other places. The editor points out that in case Government does not direct its attention to the public distress, the Bengali Press will seize this as an opportunity for hostile and insolent criticism as it did on the occasion of the Coronation Darbar.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
27th November, 1906.

The ensuing darbar at Agra.

23. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 27th November, says that the public are of opinion that the procession should pass through the bazar, so as to enable them to witness it without any inconvenience. The editor approves of the view expressed, and points out that the local press should have every opportunity of keeping themselves well informed of the events of the day.

AGRA AKHBAR,
28th November, 1906.

Kabul.

24. The Agra Akhbar of the 28th November, says that the late Amir of Kabul, Amir Abdul Rahman Khan, was of opinion that he could be happy between the English Lion on the one side and the Russian Bear on the other, only by keeping his force in a high state of efficiency. The editor says that Kabul is not a power that may be viewed with contempt.

OUDH AKHBAR,
1st December, 1906.

The Amir of Kabul.

25. A correspondent of the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 1st December is surprised that Amir Habib-ullah Khan is still referred to as an Amir even in official speeches delivered by His Excellency the Viceroy of India and in the announcements in the Gazette of India, in spite of the fact that the British Government has acknowledged the Amir's title to kingship.

HINDUSTANI,
21st November, 1906.

The Kabulis and the Police in Calcutta.

26. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 21st November, says that the recent trouble that the Calcutta police had with the Kabulis will give Government some idea of the high-handedness of the Kabuli tradesmen in their dealings with the rural public in Bengal and elsewhere.

RAHBAR,
21st November, 1906.

The police and the Kabulis in Calcutta.

27. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st November, while referring to the fight between the police and the Kabulis in Calcutta, says that the police, who originally behaved with high-handedness in the matter have contented themselves with taking no steps against the Kabulis, and the only accused under arrest has been released. The editor thinks that processions are stopped from passing through the bazar, not because there is any apprehension of a breach of the peace, but because the police and the officers mistrust their powers of interference, which tends to make the police more inefficient.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

JASUS,
21st November, 1906.

Baroda.

28. The Jasus (Agra), of the 21st November, is highly gratified to learn that the Maharaja of Baroda has issued orders to found libraries throughout his dominions, and invites other ruling chiefs of India to follow his noble example in the matter.

ADVOCATE
29th November,
1906.

Adoption in the Kashmir State.

29. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 29th November, while discussing the remarks of the Civil and Military Gazette pointing out the fact that the adoption by the Maharaja of Kashmir is strictly defined and limited, so as to be personal and for religious purposes, and will in no way affect the succession to the state, offers the following remarks:—An adopted son for religious purposes is a new definition, and we do not know who is responsible for it. Is not the present Maharaja owner of his State? Has he no free will in choosing his successor? Is a successor to be thrust on him against his will? These are questions which might be answered by the Foreign Office, which must have had a hand in making these queer arrangements for adoption.

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
24th November,
1906.

Europeans and Indians.

30. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 24th November, regrets to find that Europeans treat Indians with the utmost contempt, and quotes the case of Lala Gobind Ram, signaller, from the Punjabi of the 12th November, which paper details the manner in which the signaller was chased by some dogs belonging to two Europeans, who incited the hounds instead of calling them off. The case is now in court.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
26th November,
1906.

Justice between Europeans and Indians.

31. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 26th November, says that Mr. Stead is surprised to learn from his nephew, who is a military officer in India, that no European is punished with death for murder in this country. The information was furnished in reply to certain enquiries regarding the strained relations between the rulers and the ruled. The editor says that the information is certainly only too true, and no European has ever been sentenced to death even for the perpetration of murders of a most atrocious character, though many natives have been sentenced to long terms of imprisonment and even to transportation merely for having defamed a European.

AL BASHIR,
27th November,
1906.

Muhammadan Judges in Indian High Courts.

32. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 27th November, gives a list of barristers and judges whom the editor considers fit for occupying a seat on the High Court Bench, and suggests that at least one Muhammadan Judge should be appointed in each of the Indian High Courts. The editor while referring to the vacancy arising on the retirement of Justice Chander Madhab Chander Ghosh of the Calcutta High Court, expresses a hope that the vacancy will be filled up by the appointment of a Muhammadan Judge. He remarks that the names suggested by the Bengali Press are of congressmen, and some of them have not the necessary qualifications for the appointment.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
22nd November,
1906.

Advocates of the Allahabad High Court.

33. A correspondent makes the following remarks in the Indian People (Allahabad) of the 22nd November, regarding the enrolment of vakils as advocates:—Barristers who had taken umbrage at the enrolment of vakils as advocates in 1895, recommended that an attorney should be enrolled as an advocate in 1906, and the Judges, by unanimous resolution apparently, have accepted the recommendation. They could not pass over the claims of Mr. Durga Charan Banerjee, though his application had, on dit, on a previous occasion been shelved, and, since out of evil cometh good, Mr. Banerjee has also been enrolled as an advocate. But the public are curious to know upon what principle Mr. Malcomson has been honoured with this peculiar distinction. Sir John Edge's principle evidently was to honour the best men in the court, men at once able and honourable, who were at the top of the profession. Nobody can claim that Sir John Stanley and his brother judges have acted upon this principle. Have they then acted upon the rule of seniority? Why has Mr. Simeon been then passed over? Had they official position in view? Why has Mr. Ghulam Mujtaba been then ignored? Have they taken professional merit as the test? How was the case of the Hon'ble Mr. Malaviya then overlooked? The conclusion seems to be irresistible that sifarish is the only way to success now. But is it not deplorable that the Court should allow its discretion to be guided by the recommendation of a particular section of the bar? And it may be a question if the same consideration would have been shown to a recommendation by the Vakils' Association.

ALLAHABAD LAW JOURNAL, 1st December, 1906.

New Advocates.

34. A correspondent in the Allahabad Law Journal of the 1st December offers the following remarks on the enrolment of two gentlemen as Advocates of the High Court, North-Western Provinces :—In fairness to a large body of Vakils of not less than 10 years' standing, who had to pass an intricate examination, I would request you to enquire into the circumstances which led to the creation of two more Advocates. If I may be permitted to say, it is an open secret that after the enrolment of the two Doctors of Law, the Hon'ble Court was very loth to admit any more vakils to the Rolls of Advocates, nay it had actually declined to entertain the applications of some applicants. But it seems that subsequently, on the recommendation of the Bar Library in favour of Mr. R. Malcomson, a solicitor and judgment writer of the Court, to be enrolled as an Advocate, the Hon'ble Court was pleased to make two more advocates. By the way it is remarkable that no such distinction is made among the Vakils of the Calcutta High Court. The vakils practising in the High Court and Courts subordinate to it throughout the Provinces, expect an impartial and fair treatment of their individual cases, when the Hon'ble Judges sit together in order to make Advocates at an English meeting, where the applicants have no access and where they cannot urge anything on their behalf.

[It is not for us to pry into the secrets of an English meeting. But where the Full Court decides upon any action by unanimous resolution, even if it does so in camera, why should not the maxim Omnia præsumuntur rite et solenniter esse acta apply ?—Ed.]

ANAND, 20th November, 1906.

Village Panchayats.

35. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 20th November says that much time and wealth would be saved if the Indian National Congress could pass a resolution, and induce the Indian public to settle their civil disputes out of court by a reference to panchayats.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 22nd November, 1906.

A be-wigged Court.

36. A correspondent contributes the following letter to the Indian People of the 22nd November, regarding the use of wigs in the local High Court :—You have noticed the fact that all the barristers in the local High Court, and four out of six Judges have recently gone in for a new head-dress in the shape of wigs, but you do not profess to inquire into the reason. The minds of some loiterers in the Court have been much exercised over the matter, and several malicious explanations have been given. The Pioneer, for example has suggested that it is more seemly and decorous to put on wigs, implying thereby that the judges and the barristers were an unseemly and indecorous body previously. The Allahabad Law Journal, commenting upon the recrudescence of the wig in India after three quarters of a century, says that new order may sometime change, yielding place to old. Now no doubt fashions run in cycles, but I do not think this is merely a matter of fashion. A disrespectable wag suggests that the cumbrous head-dress has been adopted to keep the wits of the wearer from some wool-gathering, but surely the wits of all our judges are not always in the habit of wandering. A fourth suggestion is that the wig is meant to be the one touch of art which will make the judges and the barristers kins, but the very idea that any of our judges will stoop to touting for the barristers is disreputable, and I for one refuse to entertain it. To my mind, the explanation is clear, and it is to be found in science. Only the other day some scientific journals were discussing the momentous question if the human skull were not growing thinner, and the conclusion of the experts was, that the skull was undergoing a process of degeneration, and before long it might be necessary for brain-workers to put on ironcaps for the protection of their brain. Chief Justice Stanley and his followers have evidently taken time by the forelock, and put on a wig now to avoid an ironcap in the future.

KANAUJ PUNCH, 23rd November, 1906.

Prosecution of a Sub-Inspector in the Moradabad District.

37. The Kanauj Punch of the 23rd November, while referring to the conviction of a Sub-Inspector in the Moradabad district on a charge of wrongfully confining a person in order to extort a bribe of one thousand rupees, expresses his regret that not even two per cent. of honest men are to be found in any department, and yet stringent measures are not adopted to stop bribery.

ANAND,
20th November, 1906.

The estate of the late Maharaja of Ajudhya.

38. The Anand (Lucknow) of the 20th November, regrets to note that the estate of the late Maharaja of Ajudhya is encumbered with debts amounting to sixty-four lakhs of rupees, and suggests that His Honour Sir James Digges La Touche would do well to place it forthwith under the Court of Wards. The editor suggests that a portion of the estate might be sold off, and certain debts liquidated at once with a view to prevent an accumulation of interest.

HINDUSTANI,
21st November, 1906.

The death of the Maharaja of Ajudhya.

39. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 21st November, says that the much lamented death of the Maharaja of Ajudhya has brought the questions of succession and the indebtedness of the estate to the fore; that it is very fortunate that His Honour Sir James Digges LaTouche is yet at the head of Government, and it is to be hoped that, in view of the relations that have existed all along between the Maharaja and His Honour, early steps will be taken to place the estate under the management of the Court of Wards. The editor suggests that the portion of the estate which is situated in the Gonda district should be disposed of forthwith, and the assets spent in payment of such of the loans as have been contracted at high rates of interest. He concludes with pointing out that, since the estate will be under the management of the Board of Revenue, the Local Government will have the opportunity of moving the Government of India to raise a debenture loan at a low rate of interest for the payment of existing debts, and hopes that in case such a course is adopted the estate, if in honest hands, will be free from all encumbrances in about ten years' time.

BHARAT JIWAN,
26th November, 1906.

The future of Ajudhya.

40. The editor of the Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of the 26th November, expresses his approval of the proposal to place the estate, left by the late Maharaja of Ajudhya under the Court of Wards, and to pay off the existing debts by contracting fresh loans at low interest.

(b).—Police.

JASUS,
21st November, 1906.

Neglect of duty on the part of the railway police at Shikohabad.

41. A correspondent in the Jásus (Agra), of the 21st November, invites the attention of the Deputy Inspector-General of Police, Railway Branch, to the very unsatisfactory conduct and neglect of duty on the part of a constable, on duty at Shikohabad station on the East Indian Railway. He says that on the 27th October 1906, at 5 A.M. he made a report to the constable on duty of the theft of a leather bag with property to the value of Rs. 100, belonging to his brother being stolen from the waiting-room. The constable instead of taking steps to secure the arrest of the offender and the property, treated the matter with indifference, saying that a theft at the alleged time was impossible, and that the bag must have been stolen sometime during the night, and asked him to come to the thana in the evening when investigation would be taken up according to law. He then goes on to say, that three days after the occurrence, the investigation of the case was taken up by the Sub-Inspector, who, after making the preliminary enquiry, fixed his suspicions on the railway coolies, who might have removed the bag in the confusion that prevailed owing to the Batesar fair. He expresses a hope that due notice will be taken of the conduct of the police in the matter, and that an experienced officer will be deputed to enquire into the case.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
23rd November, 1906.

The police and bad characters.

42. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 23rd November, says that a police-officer alone can imagine the difficulties he has to experience in detecting crime. Men of bad character are act with every license as they know that the police will get into trouble if they interfere unnecessarily with their liberty, and it is therefore highly desirable that the executive authorities should render every possible assistance to the police in dealing with crime generally, and the working of the bad livelihood sections in particular. The police on their part must be careful that they do not molest innocent persons.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
23rd November 1906.

The transfer of Police Officers.

43. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 23rd November, disapproves of frequent transfers of police officers, and remarks that the practice is injurious to public interests. There is no doubt, that police officers are all much of the same worth as is apparent from the fact that these transfers do not in any way result in keeping down crime in the circles concerned.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
24th November, 1906.

Corruption in the Police Department.

44. The editor of the Awaza-i-Khalq, while referring to an article in the Bengalee in its issue of the 24th November, says that no amount of promotion will check the corruption of the police, and it is desirable that proper steps should be taken to restrict the excessive powers that they wield at present.

BHARAT JIWAN,
26th November, 1906.

Police oppression.

45. A correspondent from Gaya, while referring in the Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of the 26th November, to police oppression in general mentions a case in which two police constables beat a fruit-seller for refusing to supply them with fruit without payment. The fruit-sellers closed their shops in a body, and opened them, only on receiving assurances of immunity against police oppression from the Collector. The case is now pending in court, and it is to be hoped that the offenders will receive their deserved punishment.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
23rd November 1906.

Dakaitis in Lucknow.

46. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 23rd November, remarks that only recently a dakaiti was committed on certain women, while on their way to the railway station; it now transpires that another has been perpetrated on the famous temple at Aliganj (Lucknow), and that the dakaits have taken all that could be found. The editor characterises the state of affairs as disgraceful and thinks that dakaiti has become a means of livelihood in Lucknow.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
24th November, 1906.

Thefts in Benares.

47. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 24th November, notices with regret that the local police cannot cope with thefts in Benares, which are on the increase.

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
23rd November, 1906.

Assessment of income-tax.

48. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 23rd November, regrets to notice that those entrusted with the duty of assessing income-tax do not discharge their duties conscientiously, and that there is a tendency in them to raise these taxes from time to time, as they are under the impression that such conduct is calculated to help them in securing the good-will of Government.

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

UNION GAZETTE,
21st November, 1906.

Hackney carriages in Moradabad.

49. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 21st November, is amazed at the apathy of the Moradabad Municipality towards any reform in the hackney carriages of Moradabad, and points out that the roofs of these carriages are so low as to inconvenience even persons of average height while driving in them. The editor says that the practice of compelling passengers to vacate a carriage in the case of a higher offer, or when the carriage is required by the police is very reprehensible, and points out that a Babu is the chief offender in this matter.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
23rd November, 1906

Increase of expenditure in municipalities.

50. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 23rd November, views with disapprobation the growing tendency of municipalities generally to undertake reforms though they have no funds in hand. The editor thinks that such a course will sooner or later prove ruinous to the general public, and it is desirable that the matter should receive due consideration from Government.

TUHFA-I-HIND,
25th November, 1906.

Roads in Bijnor.

51. The Tuhfa-i-Hind (Bijnor) of the 25th November, says that the roads in Bijnor, with the exception of two, are unmetalled ones and stand much in need of repairs; that all that the contractors do is to fill up cavities caused during the rains, and that some of the roads are now in a level with the ground. The matter deserves the serious attention of the local district board, and it is to be hoped that Sahibzada Abdul Hamid Khan, who spares himself no pains to secure public welfare will be able to see that necessary repairs are undertaken. The editor invites his particular attention to the Paoli road which has the heaviest traffic, and is used by persons taking gur and grain to Muzaffarnagar.

BHARAT JIWAN,
26th November,
1906.

Fire at Benares.

52. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of the 26th November, while referring to the terrible fire that broke out at Bisheshargan j (Benares) points out that much of the loss was due to the inadequate water supply, for which the municipality are to blame. The editor hopes that they will take necessary measures to be prepared for future emergencies.

(e).—Education.

HINDUSTANI,
21st November,
1906.

The Convocation meeting of the Allahabad University.

53. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 21st November, says that Pandit Sundar Lal, the Vice-Chancellor, made an eloquent appeal in behalf of technical education towards the close of his address at the last Convocation meeting of the Allahabad University. He urged high education in arts and manufactures on scientific principles; and pointed out that the failure of Indian arts and industries was due to the fact that, being dependent on manual labour, they could not compete with European enterprise, where machinery is employed in every branch of industry. Beetroot sugar and artificial indigo are replacing Indian products manufactured from the sugarcane and the indigo plant. He was of opinion that steps should be taken to spread technical education throughout India; he dwelt on the existing system of education in America, and expressed satisfaction at learning that the surplus money of the Victoria Memorial Fund in the Province of Agra will be spent on founding one or more scholarships to be given to such students as, after passing the M.A. examination in science, undertake to spend their time in making scientific research, and in writing original works on science, or in making translations of scientific works.

HINDUSTANI,
21st November,
1906.

The Rajput deputation.

54. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 21st November, while referring to the Rajput deputation, expresses a hope that the public will join His Honour in wishing every success to the Maha Sabha in educating the thirty lakhs of Rajputs inhabiting India, but is afraid that its efforts to establish a separate Rajput College may not at present bear fruitful results.

TUHFA-I-HIND,
25th November,
1906.

The Rajput deputation.

55. The Tuhfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 25th November, while referring to the Rajput deputation, says that there is no doubt that the Rajput Maha Sabha is doing very good work, but considering that a sum of only a lac and a half rupees has so far been collected out of twenty lacs of rupees that will be required for starting a Rajput College, it seems desirable that the interest of the sum realized may be spent in founding scholarships for promoting higher education.

CHHATRA HITESHI,
November, 1906.

Pay of teachers in Tahsili schools.

56. The Chhátra Hiteshi (Aligarh), for November, while expressing its satisfaction at the increase of pay given to teachers of tahsili schools in the United Provinces, points out that the assistant teachers likewise should get at least Rs. 20 per mensem.

UNION GAZETTE,
21st November,
1906.

Female education.

57. A correspondent in the Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 21st November, condemns female education and points out that it leads to many serious evil consequences. He refers to the opinion of Mr. Badr-ud-din Tyabji in support of his contention, and remarks that the objectionable influence of families belonging to the Aligarh school is affecting the lower classes likewise. He concludes with referring to the existence of a girl teacher in Lahore whose bad example is likely to lead to great results.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
22nd November,
1906.

Schools under District Boards.

58. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 22nd November, says that the new rules which have had the effect of placing district and mufassil schools under district and local boards are doing just the mischief that was anticipated when they were about to be passed. The real control has passed from Inspectors and educational officers to the members of the boards. As a consequence, head-masters and other teachers dare not keep back the sons and wards of the members from promotion, even if they happen to be unfit. In the case of more advanced students the answer papers are carefully preserved so that, whenever there is any complaint that the son or ward of any member has not been promoted, the papers are produced for the inspection of the Collector or the chairman of the board. In the lower forms in which only oral examinations take place no evidence can be kept, and all boys belonging to the families of the members of boards have to be promoted, the teachers having no option. Is the new system likely to have beneficial or pernicious results, and is the cause of education likely to be promoted by this state of things.

SHAHNA-I-HIND, 24th November, 1906.

The Aligarh College.

59. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut) of the 24th November, says that it is useless making any complaints against the boarding arrangements in the Aligarh College, as they are far better than what one finds in Arabic schools elsewhere. The editor remarks somewhat sarcastically that the Aligarh authorities are compelled to effect a saving in every possible direction, because the students cannot otherwise find means to adopt a European style of dress, which is looked upon as essential and is expensive to keep up.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ, 24th November, 1906.

The Kayasth Pathshala.

60. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 24th November, says that the existing state of affairs in the Kayasth Pathshala is very deplorable. Munshi Ishwar Saran, a vakil of Gorakhpur, paid a flying visit to the Pathshala, and took the teachers unawares. While examining the classes he asked one of the teachers, Babu Parmeshri Dayal, B.A., LL.B., to explain a particular passage to the students, his intention being to test the ability of the teacher himself. This attitude of the Inspector was resented by Babu Gobind Prasad Nigam, M.A. Both these teachers have since resigned their appointments. The editor regrets very much that this sort of conduct should be met with amongst Kayasths who belong to the most educated community of Hindus.

ADVOCATE, 25th November, 1906.

Deva Nagri papers in Hindi.

61. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 25th November, contains a letter from one D. P. Shukla, wherein he reiterates his request published in the Hindi monthly magazine Saraswati with a view to show the need for the publication of the Government Gazette in the Dev Nagri characters. He points out that the argument applies not only to the Government Gazette, but to all the Government publications which have to appear in vernacular for the information of the public, concludes with citing the instance of the Urdu Agricultural Journal Mufid-ul Mazarain, published by the Agricultural Department of these provinces, and reminds Government of the wise suggestion made by the Director of the Department in his last report.

AL BASHIR, 27th November, 1906.

Education among Muhammadans.

62. Al Bashir (Etawah) of the 27th November, while reproducing an article contributed by Professor Ziya-ud-din Ahmad on secondary education in France, recounts certain innovations introduced in the Muhammadan boarding-house at Etawah, and regrets that the Muhammadans in India do not pay the least attention to education, which is the chief cause of their distress.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE, 28th November, 1906.

The All-Indian Muhammadan Education Conference.

63. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 28th November exhorts the Muhammadan public to muster strong at the ensuing All-India Muhammadan Educational Conference to be held at Dacca, and announces that the conference will have nothing whatever to do with politics. The editor says that the conference was originated by Sir Saiyid Ahmad Khan, and affords every facility for interchange of thought and visits to Muhammadans all over India, who have the opportunity of meeting and discussing at least once a year questions relating to the well-being of the community. The Nawab of Dacca is making all possible arrangements that can conduce to the comfort of the visitors.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 23rd November, 1906.

Famine in Ajmer.

64. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 23rd November, says that grain in Ajmer is selling at famine prices in spite of the good harvest, and that the police there seem to be quite unmindful of their duties in checking the sale of adulterated ghi and other articles of food in spite of repeated complaints to that effect.

(g).—General.

SANADH OPKARAK,
September and October, 1906.
The swadeshi movement.

65. The Sanadh Opkarak (Meerut), points out in its combined issue for September and October, that the Indians are entirely dependent on foreign countries for the supply of their daily wants, and suggests that both Hindus and Muhammadans should be able to merge their racial differences and work for the common good of the country, which depends materially on the promotion of the swadeshi movement.

KALWAR MITRA,
October and November, 1906.
The swadeshi movement.

66. The Kalwar Mitra (Allahabad), says in its combined issue for October and November, that India affords a wide field for foreign enterprise, that it is sadly wanting in commercial instinct, and that her poverty is due to her lack of energy in promoting Indian arts and manufactures. The export of Indian grain and other agricultural products is another great factor which contributes to her poverty. The editor points out that some of the products of India undergo a process of manufacture in European countries, after which they are brought back to India and sold at marvellously high prices. He asks if the Indians cannot prepare their own products in the same way as Europeans do. He deplores that Indian arts and industries and agriculture have undergone considerable deterioration, and are not yet sufficiently attended to by Indians.

CHHATRA HITESHI,
November, 1906.
The swadeshi movement.

67. The Chhátra Hiteshi (Aligarh) for November, while referring to the progress of the swadeshi movement all over India, expresses its regret at finding that Aligarh is lagging behind. The editor says that use of foreign sugar at Aligarh should be discouraged as soon as possible.

BANIJYA SUKHDAYAK,
November, 1906.
The swadeshi movement.

68. The Banijya Sukhdayak (Benares) for November, expresses its gratification at the interest evinced by the Benares public in promoting the swadeshi movement, by boycotting foreign sugar and promoting indigenous arts and industries. The editor exhorts Municipal Commissioners in particular, and the Indian public in general, to promote the swadeshi movement if they have the welfare of the country at heart.

CHHATRA HITESHI,
November, 1906.
The swadeshi movement.

69. The Chhátra Hiteshi (Aligarh) for November, is highly gratified to learn that vows have been made at Amthan in the Etah district to abstain from using, and exposing foreign sugar for sale. The editor suggests the desirability of similar measures being taken all over the country.

BRAHMIN SAMACHAR,
November, 1906.
The swadeshi movement.

70. The Brahmin Samachar (Meerut), for November, says that much interest was evinced at the swadeshi meetings held at Meerut on the 16th, 17th and 19th October last, when Mr. Ahmad Raza of Delhi, Rae Murlidhar of Umballa and other Hindu and Muhammadan speakers dwelt on the advantages conferred by the swadeshi movement, and exhorted the public to have the promotion of its interests at heart.

BRAHMIN SAMACHAR,
November, 1906.
The swadeshi movement.

71. The Brahmin Samachar (Meerut) for November, says that a number of stirring speeches were delivered at a meeting of the Kayasth debating club exhorting the Hindus and Muhammadans to co-operate in promoting the swadeshi movement, which is purely a social movement and has nothing to do with politics.

BARANASI,
6th November, 1906.
The swadeshi movement.

72. The Baranasi (Benares) of the 6th November, received on 26th November, says that the attempt of Lord Curzon to strike at the very root of Indian progress has, in spite of him, proved a boon to India, in that it has given an impetus to the swadeshi movement, on which depends the future regeneration of the country.

ANAND,
20th November, 1906.
The swadeshi movement.

73. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 20th November, while pointing out that a decrease of 20 per cent. in the import of foreign goods shows decided progress of the swadeshi movement, says that it has to be borne in mind that a large proportion of this decrease is to be credited to the efforts of Bengal.

BARANASI,
20th November, 1906.
The swadeshi movement.

74. The Baranasi (Benares) of the 20th November, publishes a list of purely swadeshi institutions, firms and factories which amply testifies to the progress that the swadeshi movement is making in Bengal.

OUDH AKHBAR,
26th November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

75. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 26th November, says that the Hindu leaders of religion have pronounced their verdict against the use of foreign sugar, which is refined by means of bovine blood and bone-ash, but the leaders of Shia and Sunni communities alike have so far expressed no definite opinion on the subject. The editor points out that the Hindus and Muhammadans have lived on terms of friendship for centuries, as the latter have adopted India as their domicile. The Europeans on the other hand, have all along tried to supersede indigenous manufactures by importing English products, which has drained crores of rupees from India. It is therefore desirable that religious leaders should give every support to the swadeshi movement so as to facilitate its progress, and thereby check the ever-increasing poverty of India. He hopes that the swadeshi movement will contribute materially to the reunion between Hindus and Muhammadans, and concludes with exhorting the Indians to persevere in promoting its cause.

UNION GAZETTE,
21st November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

76. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 21st November, reproduces certain verses from the Hitkari (Amritsar) wherein the public are exhorted to encourage swadeshi manufactures and to boycott foreign products at whatever cost. The editor suggests that the quality of indigenous products will increase with the demand, and that such a course if adopted will stop the drain of Indian wealth into foreign countries.

RAHBAR,
21st November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

77. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st November, while referring to a complaint made against certain students for shaving the beard of a Muhammadan at Rangpur, because he wanted to purchase some foreign piece-goods from the shop of a Marwari, says that the students were doubtless to blame, and asks why the Muhammadans are opposed to the swadeshi movement. The editor exhorts them to make common cause with the Hindus in promoting the movement, and remarks that this case should not have gone to court as mere boys were concerned.

RAHBAR,
21st November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

78. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 21st November, says that the failure of certain English firms will, it is to be hoped, open the eyes of the sceptical Anglo-Indian who would not believe that the swadeshi movement has proved a real success. The editor is of opinion that the Indians will continue to boycott English manufactures until they receive due consideration at the hands of their rulers.

HINDOSTHAN,
22nd November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

79. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of the 22nd November, says that the promotion of indigenous arts and manufactures is essential to the prosperity of the country, and suggests that the formation of committees like that in Benares, for employing orphans and encouraging swadeshi industries will be very beneficial all over the country. The editor points out that perfection and excellence can be attained only by practice and public support, therefore the encouragement of even such articles as for the time being are in a crude form is very necessary.

MOHINI,
23rd November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

80. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 23rd November, feels extremely gratified at the progress made by the swadeshi movement, of which the large number of factories that have come into existence during the last two years gives ample testimony. The editor asks the public to beware of investments in banks, and advises them to lay out their money in promoting indigenous manufactures by opening more factories and starting other trading associations.

KANAUJ PANCH,
23rd November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

81. The Kanauj Punch of the 23rd November, while admitting the usefulness of the swadeshi movement, says that it is a serious mistake on the part of the promoters of the swadeshi movement to think that they can make any progress in this direction by compelling people to give up the use of articles of foreign manufacture, and points out that such a course cannot but be looked upon with disfavour by Government.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
24th November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

82. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 24th November, reproduces an article from the Rast Guftar wherein the editor has expressed his gratification at the practical work that the Lucknow public is doing in promoting swadeshi interests. The editor says that weekly meetings are held in one quarter or another throughout the city, and hopes that such a course will do immense good to Lucknow in particular and to the country in general. He extols the self-sacrifice that Lala Banarsi Lal is making and eulogizes him for the interest he evinces in the swadeshi cause. He concludes with exhorting people in other cities and towns to take up the swadeshi cause with the same zeal as is evinced by the Lucknow public.

HINDOSTHAN,
25th November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

83. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 25th November, while referring to the constant increase in the number of factories during the last two years, points out that the prosperity of India will be commensurate with the increase in indigenous trade, and exhorts the Indians therefore to continue their efforts towards opening new factories and starting other trading associations.

BHARAT JIWAN,
26th November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

84. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of the 26th November, says that the boycott of foreign goods will improve the resources of the country and save the Indians from the indignities to which they have to submit at the hands of foreign owners of mills and factories.

BHARAT JIWAN,
26th November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

85. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares) of the 26th November, says that every attempt should be made to spread the swadeshi movement in villages and towns alike. The editor advises the Indian public to lose no time in making reforms and concludes with exhorting the people to refrain from the use of foreign sugar as its refinement involves the use of bovine blood and bone-ash.

OUDH AKHBAR,
29th November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

86. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 29th November, says that the zeal of the Punjabis in promoting the swadeshi movement is second to that of the Bengalis only. The hand-looms of the Punjab are now being worked on a much more extended scale than they were heretofore, and the Punjabis are everywhere busy adopting new industries. He says that it has been pointed out with the utmost clearness that the swadeshi movement is quite distinct from politics, and is based on patriotism, and concludes with exhorting the Indians to lay aside all racial prejudices in co-operating in the regeneration of India.

MOHINI,
27th November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

87. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 27th November, says that the Indians are now sufficiently impressed with the usefulness of the swadeshi movement, as is indicated by the fact that a large number of new factories and trading associations have come into existence during the last two years. The editor points out that a new spinning and weaving factory has been opened recently at Broach.

AL BASHIR,
27th November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

88. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 27th November, says that the swadeshi movement has now attained an irresistible force. Factories, firms, banks and co-operative associations are coming into existence all over the country. The public are making a sustained effort towards the organization of technical education. Students are being sent constantly to Japan and America to receive technical education, and there are clear indications of the impetus that the movement has assumed. The boycott movement however is only ephemeral in its existence, and is sure to die a natural death after the craze over the partition of Bengal is over. There can be no doubt that cheap labour will be a great factor in the success of Indian enterprise in this direction. The editor regrets very much that Muhammadans have so far lagged behind in taking to swadeshi manufactures.

OUDH PUNCH,
29th November,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

89. The Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 29th November, says that there can be no doubt that the swadeshi movement has caused considerable loss to foreign trade, as admitted by a Manchester paper. This success of the swadeshi movement, however, has led certain Anglo-Indian officers to behave peculiarly, with a view to express their resentment. The conduct of a certain District Magistrate is instanced who on finding the word swadeshi on a signboard in the district under his administration went to the length of erasing the word with his own hands. The result however was not what he desired, and shopkeepers generally have since been incited to deal in indigenous products exclusively.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
23rd November,
1906.

The Nasim-i-Agra of the 23rd November, says that the District Magistrate of Jullundur erased the word swadeshi from a signboard which happened to attract his attention while passing through the bazar, that the public mind thereon was considerably agitated, and the result has been that his action has given a fresh impetus to the swadeshi movement.

The swadeshi movement.

OUDH PUNCH,
29th November,
1906.

90. The Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 29th November, contains a cartoon, wherein patriotism leads the race, swadeshi manufactures and cheapness follow in its train and bedeshi (foreign products) lags behind.

The swadeshi movement.

OUDH AKHBAR,
1st December,
1906.

91. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 1st December, says that the swadeshi movement is making steady progress in Lucknow, where weekly meetings are held to promote its cause, and to devise means with a view to foster indigenous arts and manufactures.

Anglo-Indian swadeshism.

HINDUSTANI,
21st November,
1906.

92. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 21st November, agrees with the Pioneer in regarding Anglo-Indian factories in India as instances of swadeshi enterprise, but expresses its disapprobation of the hostile attitude taken up by the Pioneer towards the agitation of the Bengalis in supporting the swadeshi movement, considering that Indian firms and manufactories will shortly co-operate with those established by Anglo-Indians in removing the wants of the Indians.

Foreign sugar.

SANADH, OPKARAK,
September and
October, 1906.

93. The Sanádhopkárak (Meerut), exhorts Hindus and Muhammadans alike in its combined issue for September and October to give up the use of foreign sugar which is refined by means of bovine blood and bone-ash.

Foreign sugar.

SANADH. OPKARAK,
September and
October, 1906.

94. The Sanádhopkárak (Meerut) while referring in its combined issue for September and October to a telegram appearing in the Empire, quotes references from the encyclopædia Britannica and other works of authority, to show that the blood of cows, pigs and other animals and bone-ash are employed in the process of refining foreign sugar. The editor points out that the use of foreign sugar is not only against the dictates of religion, but is also deleterious to health, and that Indians should not be deterred from decrying the process of its refinement by idle threats of suits for damages held out by Anglo-Indian merchants, as there can be no doubt that the refinement of English salt, foreign sugar and the sizing of foreign piece-goods involves the use of such articles as are forbidden by religion, as shown by extracts from works of indisputable authority.

Cultivation of sugar-cane.

BANJIYA SUKH-DAYAK,
November,
1906

95. The Banjiya Sukhdayak (Benares) for November, while dwelling on the impropriety of using foreign sugar both from a religious and hygienic point of view, exhorts the Indian public to refrain from its use, and to cultivate the Indian sugarcane on a much wider scale, so as to be able to meet the requirements of the country, and to advance the interests of the swadeshi movement.

Rakhi ceremony.

RAHBAR,
21st November,
1906.

96. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 21st November, considers the dismissal of a chaukidar by the District Magistrate of Murshidabad for having a rakhi (thread) tied round his wrist, as a serious blot on British administration, and asks if Government servants are not to give vent to their feelings. The editor asks why Government tolerates this sort of conduct on the part of its subordinate officials.

The Barisal case.

OUDH AKHBAR,
24th November,
1906.

97. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 24th November, says that the acquittal of Mr. Kemp and the other police officers who were placed on their trial for their undue interference with the Barisal Conference has caused much dissatisfaction in the Bengali Press. Much is made of the contradictory statements made by Mr. Kemp on certain points. The editor says that it is however satisfactory to note that the case was tried by a Bengali Deputy Magistrate and not by a European. He then says that if the information about Mr. Kemp's reduction is true the Bengalis have no reason to grumble at the decision arrived at.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

RAHBAR,
21st November,
1906.

98. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 21st November, while referring to the correspondence relating to the resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller, congratulates Lord Minto on the tact and foresight he displayed in accepting Sir Bampfylde's resignation, and remarks that, though the English Press supports Sir Fuller merely on racial grounds, such a course cannot give what is improper the colour of propriety.

ZUL QARNAIN,
21st November,
1906.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller's resignation.

99. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 21st November, while referring to the correspondence between His Excellency the Viceroy and Sir Bampfylde Fuller regarding the disaffiliation of two schools at Sirajganj from the University, and his subsequent resignation, says that on a perusal of the correspondence which had now been laid before the public, a prudent man cannot but come to the conclusion that Sir Fuller acted rightly, that it was a serious mistake on the part of the managers of the schools to disobey the orders of the highest authority in the province, inviting their attention to the due discharge of their duties by preventing students from dabbling in politics, which was calculated to interfere with their studies. The editor thinks that it is not a matter for surprise that the Pioneer supports Lord Minto who is at the head of Government at present, but says that no intelligent man will attach any blame to Sir Fuller for what he did under the circumstances, and that Lord Minto showed unparalleled weakness in accepting his resignation.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
27th November,
1906.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

100. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 27th November, says on the authority of the Amrita Bazar Patrika, that Sir Bampfylde Fuller wrote to the Government of India, that he had made a mistake in resigning his appointment, when two months' privilege leave was due to him, and that in consequence he was withdrawing his resignation. The Government of India, however, has declined to accede to his request, as the public feeling against him has not yet subsided, and the grounds set forth by him were not sufficient to warrant the cancellation of his resignation.

AL BASHIR.
27th November,
1906.

The resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

101. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 27th November, says that there can be no doubt that Sir Bampfylde Fuller has sacrificed himself with a view to maintain peace and order in the country. The papers relating to his resignation have now been published, and the only charge brought against him by his opponents is that he did not consult the Imperial Government before taking any official action in reporting two of the schools for disaffiliation from the University.

OUDH AKHBAR.
28th November,
1906.

The resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

102. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 28th November, while referring to the publication of papers relating to the resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller, points out that His Honour was very much mistaken in holding out threats of resignation to Lord Minto, and concludes with the remark that his case teaches a moral lesson, that no one should attach undue importance to himself.

PUBLIC NEWS,
October, 1906.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

103. The Public News (Meerut), for October, regrets to find that the relations between Hindus and Muhammadans are becoming more and more strained every day. The two communities have lived side by side for centuries and have shared each other's joys and sorrows. The Muhammadan rulers in the past never observed any distinctions of creed in the distribution of appointments between Hindus and Muhammadans, and there were no posts of any distinction that were not open to Hindus. It appears almost impossible to remove the tension of feeling that exists at present, and no one can deny that the existing state of affairs is very detrimental to the well-being of the country. It is very much to be regretted that the Muhammadans have celebrated the partition of Bengal with joy and festivity. The editor exhorts the leaders of both communities to take steps to bridge the existing gulf, and trusts that Government will under no circumstances favour one community to the detriment of another.

HINDUSTANI,
21st November,
1906.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

104. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 21st November, expresses its disapprobation of the attitude taken up by the Hindu and Muhammadan Press in detracting from each other's merit, and in trying to foment ill-will between the two communities; but feels gratified at finding that a certain missionary in Lahore is doing all that he can, to foster friendly relations between Hindus and Muhammadans. The editor makes particular mention of an article contributed by Shamsul-Ulma Maulvi Zakulla in the Aligarh Institute Gazette, wherein he says that those who try to bring about union between Hindus and Muhammadans, might as well try to squeeze blood out of a stone. He points out in conclusion that it is every desirable that both communities should refrain from making such remarks as are calculated to widen the already existing gulf between them.

NASIM I-AGRA, 23rd November, 1906.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

105. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 23rd November, regrets to find that the Hindus and Muhammadans who have lived side by side for centuries on friendly terms, should now oppose each other openly. The editor is of opinion that the strained relations between the two communities are due to selfishness, that their well being depends on co-operation, and on the cultivation of friendly relations, and that it is therefore extremely desirable that they should lay aside selfishness and help each other as they have done heretofore, and contribute to mutual happiness.

OUDH AKHBAR, 29th November, 1906.

Friendly relations between the Hindus and Muhammadans at Aligarh.

106. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 29th November, says that the existence of friendly relations between the Hindus and Muhammadans at Aligarh is sufficiently proved by the election of Babu Sheo Dayal, vakil, and Haji Muhammad Yusuf Khan, rais, as members in spite of the disproportion between the members of each community in the district and municipal boards. He says that the allegation regarding the tension of racial feelings and selfishness at Aligarh is quite unfounded. He concludes with the hope that the combined efforts of these gentlemen, who are no doubt ardent advocates of national reunion, will be productive of many good results.

JASUS, 21st November, 1906.

Europeans and Indians.

107. The Jásus (Agra), of the 21st November, says that the Bengalis reply to the expression native by calling Englishmen, firanghis, which is disliked by the latter. The editor suggests that Englishmen should act on the principle of "Do as you would be done by" and refrain from using the word native when speaking of Indians.

UNION GAZETTE, 21st November, 1906.

Muhammadans and Europeans.

108. The editor of the Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 21st November, says that the Jhang is actuated by religious prejudices in alleging that the Muhammadans have always tried to detract from the merit and respectability of Hindus, and that British rule has made them shameless and immodest. The editor asks if all Muhammadan rulers are equally responsible for slighting and disparaging the Hindus. As regards the responsibility of Englishmen for making Hindus immodest he warns the editor of the Jhang, and draws his attention to the provisions of section 153, Indian Penal Code.

UNION GAZETTE, 21st Novembe 1906.

High-handedness of Europeans.

109. The editor of the Union Gazette of the 21st November, while referring to the approbation with which the Jhang views the conduct of an educated young Indian who refused to deny himself the use of his umbrella when asked to do so by a European, says that it would have been really very amusing if the parties had closed in a hand-to-hand contest; and considers that a humiliating apology made by the European for his conduct did not sufficiently meet the requirements of the case.

AL ISLAM, 23rd November, 1906.

Pandit Jwala Parshad, District Magistrate of Etah.

110. Al Islam (Aligarh) of the 23rd November, while reiterating the remarks of Al Bashir (Etawah) suggests, that since Pandit Jwala Prasad, District Magistrate of Etah does not take steps to exonerate himself of the specific charges of racial animosity brought against him by Al-Bashir, it is high time that Government should move in the matter, and take steps to secure the Muhammadan public of Etah from the racial prejudices of their Hindu District Magistrate. The editor is of opinion that the general statement of the Hindustani in his defence is of no avail, and that the specific charges made by Al Bashir should be met by specific arguments.

NAIYAR-I AZAM, 21st November, 1906.

Pandit Jwala Prasad, District Magistrate of Etah.

111. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 21st November, while referring to the prejudiced conduct of Pandit Jwala Prasad, District Magistrate of Etah, and Rai Tekchand, Deputy Commissioner of Ludhiana, hopes that a day will come when the Muhammadans will have the opportunity of favouring their own community and of seeing through the tricks of the Hindus. The editor considers the remarks of certain congress papers to carry no weight, as being only general, and suggests that Pandit Jwala Prasad should prosecute the editor of Al Bashir (Etawah), for defamation if he can show the charges brought against him to be really untrue. He further points out that Pandit Jwala Prasad can maintain his prestige only if he exonerates himself of the charges in the course of a sifting judicial enquiry, and not otherwise.

HINDUSTANI,
21st November,
1906.

The Nagri edition of the Government Gazette and the Mufid-ul Mazarain.

112 The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 21st November, says that Mr. D. P. Shukla reiterates his views regarding the publication of a Nagri edition of the Provincial Government Gazette, and suggests that a Nagri edition of the Mufid-ul Mazarain likewise should be issued along with the Urdu edition now in existence.

JASUS
21st November,
1906.

Swindling by means of false and deceitful advertisements.

113. A correspondent in the Jásus (Agra) of the 21st November, points out the desirability of editors and proprietors of newspapers refraining from publishing advertisements calculated to swindle the public, which are frequently couched in high flown language.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
24th November,
1906.

The Native Press and its relations with Government.

114. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 24th November, says that Government is making a great mistake in thinking that the strong language employed by the Native Press is calculated to injure its stability. The Native Press is the true vehicle of public opinion in India, and should be viewed most favourably by Government. It renders inestimable service both to the public and to Government, and is more useful as a source of information than the Criminal Investigation Department. Any attempt to suppress public opinion will tend to produce evil results.

INDIAN PUNCH,
27th November,
1906.

Urdu newspapers.

115. The Indian Punch (Budaun) of the 27th November, says that Urdu newspapers generally prove to be a failure because they are published most irregularly, with few honourable exceptions they are not in the hands of honest and straightforward men, the editors and proprietors are not sufficiently courteous and obliging in their dealings with their correspondents, and because the majority of editors are incompetent, and far from well-informed.

UNION GAZETTE,
21st November,
1906.

Cantonment Magistrate, Jullundhur.

116. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 21st November, views with disapprobation the order of the cantonment magistrate of Julundur, directing that no one should play upon the harmonium without obtaining his permission to do so. The editor asks if everything is alright (with him), and suggests that the order might as well be extended to whistling.

INDIAN PEOPLE.
22nd November,
1906.

The Pioneer and the Indian People.

117. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad), offers the following remarks in its issue of the 22nd November, regarding the hostile criticism of some of its allegations by the Pioneer :—We stated that the Hindu College had been opposed by the Local Government. According to the Pioneer "so far from the College being opposed, it has in fact every reason to be grateful for Government favour." The point in dispute is very simple. We are not concerned with the merits or demerits of the Hindu College, nor with the question whether the treatment the College received from the Government was justified or not, but simply with the question whether that treatment is properly described as "opposition" or as "favour."

* * * * * * * *

The application of the Central Hindu College for affiliation came before the Syndicate on August 6th, 1898. "It was resolved that, subject to the sanction of the Chancellor, the affiliation sought be granted"—(see minutes for the year 1898-99). The sanction of the Chancellor was necessary according to the Act, but we believe it had never previously been withheld.

* * * * * * * *

On March 16th, 1899, the Local Government sent a letter to the Registrar refusing sanction to affiliation. It is difficult to be sure of a negative, but we cannot find in the minutes a single other instance in which the recommendation of the Syndicate was rejected. This, however, is not all. In their letter, which we would quote in full, if it were not so long, the Government said with reference to the Hindu College :—"Founded ostensibly with the object of inculcating religious sentiment, obedience and reverence for authority, as well as of imparting secular learning, this institution begins its career by undermining authority and discipline in the Government Schools in its vicinity, and when called to account makes insufficient atonement." That is to say, not merely is the management of the school attacked, but the authorities controlling it are accused, by implication, of insincerity and hypocrisy. What was the source of the information of the Local Government? According to the Pioneer, the authorities of the college had "every reason to be grateful for Government favour." We believe, however, as a matter of fact they were not grateful for this letter. The Honorary Secretary of the college wrote a letter to the Government in answer and sent a copy to the Syndicate with the request that it should be included in the minutes as the letter of the Government had been. The Syndicate had the meanness—seven of the eleven members were Government officials—to refuse to comply with this request. The accusations of the Government were sent to every Fellow of the University, while the reply was suppressed. The elementary rule of justice, that both sides should be heard, was disregarded. We think this evidence will be enough for our readers, and we merely note in passing that the Pioneer politely states that Indian editors never "think of verifying the facts on which their indictment rests." We sum up the question so that there may be no possibility of shuffling or evasion: the Local Government refuses affiliation in spite of the recommendation of the Syndicate, and accuses the college of undermining discipline and authority. Does the Government oppose or favour the college? And now we call on the Pioneer to apologise in accordance with the traditions of decent journalism.

The Indian Christians.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
23rd November,
1906.

118. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 23rd November, feels highly gratified to learn that the editor of the Indian Christians (Calcutta) has exhorted his fellow brethren to throw themselves heart and soul into the swadeshi movement. The editor points out that this is no doubt true Christian virtue, and expresses that the Indian Christains will keep up their support with unflagging zeal.

The Muhammadans of India.

OUDH AKHBAR,
27th November,
1906.

119. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 27th November, says that the Muhammadans of India are torn by internal dissensions of their own, and can hardly be expected therefore to lead the community as a whole. The deputation itself, that waited on His Excellency the Viceroy on the 1st of October did not consist of men who could be said to have common views and objects. It is extremely necessary at present that Muhammadan leaders should preach union alongside of religion. As things stand at present the Muhammadans are at a loss to find out whom they should follow in matters of religion. Amongst the Sunnis, the sufi sect is evidently making rapid progress and attracting a large following, but the Shias are so split up that it seems very difficult to get them to co-operate. Take the Aligarh College for example. The death of Sir Saiyid was followed by a hot controversy amongst the trustees, and but for the influence of the European element the College would have ceased to exist long ago. He concludes with the remark that the Muhammadans are not only loth to exert themselves, but try also to detract from the merits of their Hindu brethren, who are doing all they can to bring about a social and political regeneration in India.

Reduction of Mr. Kemp, Superintendent of Police, Barisal.

RAHBAR,
21st November,
1906.

120. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 21st November, feels highly gratified at finding that Mr. Kemp, Superintendent of Police, has been reduced to the grade of an Inspector in says connection with his uncalled for interference at the Barisal Conference. The editor that this is the first instance when a native has received some satisfaction for the wrongs done to him by a European.

The prosecution of Mr. Kemp and other Police officers.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
24th November,
1906.

121. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 24th November, while referring to the prosecution of Mr. Kemp, Superintendent of Police and certain other police-officers in connection with the disturbances at the Barisal Conference, remarks that Government had to acquit the accused on administrative grounds, and points out that every Bengali is actuated by a sense of patriotism and feels that he can be crushed only if Government can crush the Bengali nation as a whole.

OUDH AKHBAR,
29th November,
1906.

The reduction of Mr. Kemp of the Barisal Conference fame.

122. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 29th November, says that the Bengali Press is highly gratified at the spirit of justice that has led the new Lieutenant Governor of Eastern Bengal to direct the reduction of Mr. Kemp for his undue interference with the Barisal Conference. His Honour has considered Mr. Emerson quite unfit for the charge he holds, and has moved the High Court to direct his transfer elsewhere. He concludes with remarking that if these rumours are confirmed by an official announcement, there will be no room to doubt the integrity of British justice.

AL ISLAM,
23rd November,
1906.

The failure of the Arbuthnot company.

123. The editor of Al Islam (Aligarh) of the 23rd November, is much aggrieved at learning that the failure of the Arbuthnot company has been a source of much distress to the Muhammadan public generally, as the whole capital of the Anjuman Islam was in this bank at the time of its failure. He regrets to notice that the public seem to repose undue confidence in banks, and points out that the Madrasat-ul Ulum has sustained a heavy loss through the dishonesty of one individual, and yet experience does not seem to have taught its managers to refrain from making fresh deposits in banks. He suggests that the best way of securing endowments is to invest money in landed property, that if the trustees prove unworthy, those controlling the endowment have the opportunity of changing them, and that it is even preferable that a Muhammadan should divert the funds of an endowment to his private purposes than that they should fill the pockets of men who are the enemies of Muhammadans from a religious, national and political point of view.

MOHINI,
27th November,
1906.

The Arbuthnot failure.

124. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 27th November, says that an appeal is said to have been made in London where an unsuccessful attempt was made to move the Lord Mayor to open a relief fund to aid the Arbuthnot company. The editor says that it is no wonder that the attempt was unsuccessful because it is the Indians that have suffered by the failure of the Arbuthnots, and because it is the money they earned that has been lost and not that of Englishmen.

ADVOCATE,
29th November,
1906.

The Arbuthnot failure.

125. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 29th November, says that Mr. Natesar has collected certain facts which reveal a considerable want of business knowledge in the manager of the Arbuthnots. The allegation that the failure has been due to withdrawals is groundless. The firm sadly failed to keep enough cash to meet payments of fixed deposits, the mismanagement has been colossal, and the neglect of the firm to audit their accounts, and to prepare the usual balance sheets is little short of criminal. The announcement of the enormous liabilities of the London firm, and the statement published by the solicitors, much remove the last ray of hope regarding even a small dividend from the minds of the creditors. Mr. Subramaniya, another correspondent in the Indian Review, says that European banks established in India sustain the foreign trade of India, which is entirely in the hands of Europeans. These banks have comparatively a small capital of their own, but depend mainly on the deposits of the Indian people and of the Government; which latter too are of course the money of the people.

The need of an Indian bank has not only been admitted, but the prospectus for opening a bank with fifty lakhs of rupees as capital has already been published, the value of each share being put at Rs. 500. The chief factor in all banking concerns is the manager, the control upon whom, of the directorate must be very tangible. Mr. Iyar quotes on this point the opinions expressed by Mr. Bagehot in his " Lombard Street " and points out that only those who are acquainted with the forms of business, and can devote sufficient time to the bank, should be formed into a real working committee. The other elements of success are the accumulation of reserve fund in Government paper, and the periodical publication of a statement of affairs with accounts and audit sheets. A third correspondent " An European, " enumerates amongst different forms of investment land, Government paper, loans to Native States, Port Trusts, stocks in Japan and other foreign countries; debentures and preference shares. He is of opinion that knowledge is necessary above everything.

126. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 21st November, says that the District Magistrate of Mymensingh served Shoshi Kumar with a notice on very insufficient grounds, and called on him to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for wounding the religious feelings of Muhammadans, only with a view to widen the gulf between the Hindus and the Muhammadans. The editor thinks that conduct of this sort is calculated to bring the Anglo-Indian community into disrepute.

Anglo-Indian officers, and Indians.

RAHBAR
21st November, 1906.

127. The editor of the Tuhfa-i-Hind (Bijnor) in its issue of the 25th November, notes with gratification that the general tendency in India seems to awaken people to a sense of self-help, that the Indians all through the country are beginning to promote indigenous products and to boycott articles of foreign manufacture. Factories worked by Indians are coming into existence, and it is to be hoped that the day is not far distant, when it will become possible to manufacture all necessaries of life in India, instead of depending for them on foreign countries. There has been a marked decrease in foreign imports ever since the public have turned their attention to the subject. Co-operative trading companies and banks are coming into existence every day, and official figures point distinctly to the fact that foreign trade is at a discount.

Self-help in India.

TUHFA-I-HIND,
25th November, 1906.

128. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 27th November, says that the Muhammadans should be careful of imbibing Western thoughts and ideas which are exercising considerable influence on the public mind. It is highly desirable that the characteristics of the nation should be preserved instead of being allowed to lose their prominence from day to day. The editor fears that if English modes of life are allowed to influence the Muhammadans, national life will become extinct sooner or later. He regrets to find that certain Muhammadans prefer to be addressed as Mister instead of as Munshi or Maulvi.

The life and death of nations.

AL BASHIR,
27th November, 1906.

129. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 27th November, contains a letter from Raja Partab Bahadur Singh, C.I.E., Talukdar of Partabgarh, wherein he deplores the sad loss that the British Indian Association of the Talukdars has sustained in the death of the Maharaja of Ajudhya, and exhorts his brother Talukdars to exercise proper discretion in the election of their new president as a good deal of their importance depends upon the choice they make in the matter. He himself proposes that the Maharaja of Balrampur should be requested to be their next president, and expresses a hope that he will be willing to take up the office if desired.

The late Maharaja of Ajudhya.

OUDH AKHBAR,
27th November, 1906.

The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 28th November contains another letter from a correspondent who impresses on the Talukdars of Oudh the necessity of making the choice of a really deserving successor to the late Maharaja of Ajudhya as president of the British Indian Association.

130. The Sulaiman-i-Akhbar (Benares) of the 27th November, expresses the desirability of the local raises taking such steps as would protect youths from the fascinations of prostitutes, and suggests that owners of house property in the city should refuse to let out houses to them, and that if necessary Government should be moved to see that they leave Dalmandi and other respectable quarters in the city.

Prostitutes in Benares.

SULAIMAN-I-AKHBAR,
27th November, 1906.

131. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 29th November, points out the desirability of closing the Treasuries on Somvati Amawas and eclipse days in view of the fact that treasuries get few holidays and if kept open on these days much inconvenience is caused to the Hindu employés of the Treasury and other banks who have to keep their offices open owing to their transactions with the Treasury.

Holidays in Treasuries.

ADVOCATE,
29th November, 1906.

132. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 29th November, makes the following extract from the Evening Herald (New York) regarding Amar Singh and Gopal Singh who have gone to America with a view to develop Indian industries :—"To get an idea of the cost of American manufacturing materials, the Singhs have already visited Portland, Ore, Minneapolis, Minn, Boston, Mass., and Full River, Mass. Their investigations have covered a period of three months, and upon their return

Punjabis in America.

ADVOCATE,

home they will recommend the purchase of America made materials to a Syndicate of Indian merchants, which has been formed in Amritsar, a city in the province of Punjab."

V.—LEGISLATION.

HINDUSTANI,
21st November,
1906.

Transfer of cases.

133. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 21st November, says that the transfer of cases from one court to another should be left entirely at the discretion of the parties, as it is calculated to put a stop to corruption, on the part of the presiding officers, which prevails more or less everywhere. The question of the separation of the judicial and executive functions of courts has agitated the public mind for a considerable length of time, but no definite decision has yet been arrived at, since Government is of opinion that it will entail considerable extra expenditure; but the object aimed at by such separation will be greatly facilitated if the transfer of cases is made discretionary with the parties litigating, as it will exercise a strong check on officers in whom the judicial and executive functions are combined. The editor concludes with expressing a hope that the interests of justice will induce Government to give the question its due consideration.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
27th November,
1906.

Transfer of cases.

134. The Nasim-i- Agra of the 27th November, says that the transfer of cases from one court to another should be left entirely at the discretion of the parties. The fact of such transfers being left at the option of higher judicial authorities is detrimental to the interests of justice, as litigants cannot safely give out what their real difficulties are, nor have the authorities the opportunities of keeping themselves informed of the real state of affairs, or of knowing the motives that actually are at the bottom of such applications. On the other hand it often happens that in case the application is refused, the presiding officer of the court has the opportunity of showing his displeasure with the party which mistrusted his justice. Should the course suggested be adopted it will exercise a proper check on corrupt presiding officers of courts and bribery will be practically brought to an end.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
27th November,
1906.

Proposal to send a copy of the complaint with the summons or warrant sent to accused persons.

135. The Nasim-i Agra of the 27th November, says that a copy of the complaint lodged against an accused person should be sent invariably with the summons or warrant issued against him with a view to give him due notice of the charge or charges against him, and to render him every facility in meeting them efficiently when he comes into court. The editor points out the desirability of amending the law on the subject, and suggests that until this can be done, the several High Courts should enforce the suggestion within their jurisdiction, by issuing necessary orders on the subject.

VI.—RAILWAY.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
21st November,
1906.

Thefts in a Railway train.

136. The Rafiq Punch (Moradabad), of the 21st November, describes how a woman was robbed of all her property while travelling with her two daughters in a train from Gauhati to Agra, and suggests the desirability of a searching enquiry being made in the case by the Railway Police.

JASUS,
21st November,
1906.

Appointments on the North-western Railway.

137. The Jásus (Agra) of the 21st November, says that the authorities on the North-Western Railway are guilty of glaring injustice in entertaining outsiders and superseding the claims of registered candidates. Another order which is highly discreditable to the administration of the line relates to the production of death certificates before employés can get leave to attend the funeral of their relatives. The editor expresses a hope that the railway authorities will see that these highly objectionable practices are discontinued as soon as possible.

RAHBAR,
21st November,
1906.

The Jamalpur strike.

138. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 21st November, while referring to the recent strike in the Jamalpur workshops, says that things will not go on smoothly until the demands of the coolies are satisfied, and a little extra cost incurred to ensure future harmonious working.

Europeans and Indians.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
23rd November, 1906.

139. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 23rd November, says that much annoyance and inconvenience is experienced by both Indians and Europeans in travelling together by rail, and it is highly desirable that the railway authorities should take steps to make such arrangements as would obviate these difficulties.

VII.—Post Office.

The Postal department and the Europeans.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
21st November, 1906.

140. The Rafiq Punch (Moradabad), of the 21st November, agrees with the Jasus (Agra) in charging the Postal Department with showing undue favour to Europeans, and supports this allegation by referring to the appointment of a blind European as Manager of the Dead Letter office, whose chief duty is to have valuable packets and parcels opened before his own eyes.

VIII.—Native Societies and Religious and Social Matters.

The Vedic religion.

ARYA SAMACHAR,
October, 1906.

141. A correspondent in the Arya Samachar (Cawnpore) for October, suggests the desirability of Arya missions being sent out for the promulgation of the Vedic teachings in America and Japan, and points out that, if impressed favourably, the Japanese and the Americans will come forward to co-operate with the Aryas in the propagation of the Vedic religion. As regards the Englishmen he says that, being the conquering nation, they cannot fail to look down upon everything that is Indian.

Professor Parmanand's views on English Society.

ZUL-QARNAIN,
21st November, 1906.

142. The Zul-Qarnain (Budaun) of the 21st November, says that the strictures of the Pioneer on Professor Parmanand regarding the views expressed by him on English Society in Hyde Park are highly improper. The editor says that every sensible man will admit that undue liberty in English society is a source of ever-increasing evil.

The Prayag Railway Station.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
22nd November, 1906.

143. The editor of the Indian People (Allahabad) points out in its issue of the 22nd November, that the pilgrims from Benares and Ajudhya etc., are very often misled and alight at the Allenganj station which has recently been named Prayag thinking that it is the Allahabad main Station. These strangers have nobody to guide them to a safe place of rest and naturally fall an easy prey to the inducements offered by the servants of the pragwals and their subsidised servants the ekkawalas and ghariwalas. He suggests that some effort should be made to organize a committee to look after the interests of these helpless pilgrims, and to erect a suitable building close to the station which might serve the purposes of a pilgrims' home where such pilgrims as have no guides or friends with them, specially females and children can find a safe place of retreat. In conclusion he asks the Railway authorities to build a comfortable and commodious shed or waiting room for pilgrims, with separate accommodation for females at this station, which is destined to be one of their principal stations on account of the large pilgrim traffic from the north and the east.

Extra prayers during the Ramzan.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
24th November, 1906.

144. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 24th November condemns the conduct of persons who read the Koran for profit, and suggests that extra prayers during the Ramzan should be performed only by well-to-do people and not by hired readers who hurry through the prayers, without feeling at all devout about what they mumble. The editor is of opinion that the one thing that they think of is money and personal gain, and not a desire to confer any spiritual benefit on those who employ them.

Indians in England.

ADVOCATE,
25th November, 1906.

145. The Advocate (Lucknow) of the 25th November, says that at irregular intervals we hear of appeals to Englishmen on behalf of Indians sometimes for funds to help indigent Indians, at others for families to provide a home for them during their sojourn in that land. At present, as we know, a cheerless boarding-house in Bloomsbury or Bayswater or the dingy menage of a family in the suburbs is the only introduction to English domesticity that the average Indian student is enabled to get. The discipline, the peace and pleasures of an average English family are really splendid, and the importation of part of it to India will do us immense good.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
25th November,
1906.

The Pragwals.

146. The Indian People (Allahabad) of the 25th November, publishes a letter from a correspondent in its editorial columns which throws a flood of light on some of the shady and underhand methods usually adopted by pragwals for securing pilgrims, and generally supports the theory of the editor regarding the existence of an extensive conspiracy between the pragwals, their servants, ekkawalas and ghariwalas and the police. The correspondent ascribes the influence of Luchmi Narain, the jamadar of the pandas of Rameshwar, with all the officials of the Railway and the District Police and the jamadar in charge of the plague quarantine force to the fact that he himself was formerly a head constable in the police. He says from personal experience that the police officials concerned would not give preferential consideration to the offers of Jaggu, a rival pragwal, in spite of the fact that he had paid them Rs. 500 already; and remarks that the darega and the quarantine jamadar sent for Luchmi Narain on Jaggu making a further offer, and assured him that they would see that all that Luchmi Narain desired would be fulfilled.

AL BASHIR,
27th November,
1906.

Deposit of endowments in banks.

147. The editor of Al Bashir (Etawah), says in it issue of the 27th November that the trustees of the endowments made for the support of mosques in Agra and Delhi, should be careful of reposing undue confidence in banks, and suggests that the safest course for them is to invest the money in Government promissory notes, and that the interest therefrom should be employed in helping some poor students in the prosecution of their studies, if the trustees consider it objectionable to spend it on mosques.

MUFID-I-AM,
24th November, 1906.

The Caliphate of the Sultan of Turkey.

1. A correspondent in the Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of the 24th November, says that the Sultan of Turkey is the Caliph of the Muhammadans and not of the Prophet; and points out that he is entitled to this distinction only so long as he is the protector of Mecca and Medina, the sacred cities of the Muhammadans.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
24th November, 1906.

Friendly relations between Turkey and Germany.

2. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 24th November, says that the expedition in the construction of the Hedjaz Railway is attributed to a desire on the part of the Sultan of Turkey to facilitate a German invasion of India, through purely unfriendly motives towards Muhammadans, though the latter are contributing largely to meet the expenses incurred in its construction.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
1st December, 1906.

Unpleasant relations between Turkey and Persia.

3. The Kanauj Punch, of the 1st December, says that the Muhammadans of India are extremely sorry at the misunderstanding between Turkey and Persia in connection with the demarcation question.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th November, 1906.

Anglo-Russian loan to Persia.

4. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th November, regrets to find that Persia has been compelled to ask England and Russia for a small loan, in spite of its vast riches and natural resources. The editor fails to understand why any provision has been made in the treaty about the non-interference of the two great European powers with the freedom of Persia.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
1st December, 1906.

Persia.

5. The Kanauj Punch, of the 1st December, says that the introduction of the representative form of Government in Persia is not calculated to lead to any appreciable good to the country, as matters there have gone too far to admit of improvement.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th November, 1906.

Shia views regarding the rule at Mecca and Medina.

6. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th November, denounces the views expressed by the Imamia Akhbar wherein it is suggested that British rule in Mecca and Medina will be more welcome than that of the Sultan. The editor says that the views are only personal, and expresses his gratification that the idea of a Shia deputation to the Viceroy is not countenanced by the influential Shias of Lucknow.

JASUS,
28th November, 1906.

The Hedjaz Railway.

7. The Jásus (Agra), of the 28th November, says that the Sultan of Turkey is doing all that he can to complete the Hedjaz railway as far as Medina before next September.

HINDOSTHAN,
6th December, 1906.

The Khedive of Egypt.

8. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 6th December, expresses its regret at learning from the Indian Mirror that the Khedive is adopting a hostile attitude towards the British Government and is giving secret aid to its enemies. The editor suggests the desirability of Government taking early measures to check his action in this direction, and warns it to be on its guard against such insincere and dangerous friends.

(b).—Home.

RAHBAR,
28th November, 1906.

The present situation of India.

9. The editor of the Rahbar (Moradabad), while pointing out in its issue of the 28th November, that the self-sacrifice made by Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, in serving his country during the last seventy-five years has made him an object of worship with his countrymen. He thinks that Mr. Naoroji's presence will infuse a new life in the country. Referring to the encomiums bestowed on Mr. Naoroji by the several speakers at the dinner given to him on the 20th of November last, which was attended by twenty members of Parliament and about two hundred Indians, he expresses his inability to understand what Sir W. Wedderburn meant by alluding to the present situation in India as critical, since the differences between Babu Surendra Nath Banerji and Mr. Pal over the election of Mr. Tilak, were settled amicably sometime back. The present situation in India is as good as it was after peace had been proclaimed all over the country in 1858, though things in England are very different, as, though the Liberal Government in England has never before commanded such an overwhelming majority in the annals of the British Parliament, the policy of Government has undergone no appreciable change in favour of India. He concludes with the remark that Mr. Naoroji is coming out to India as the President-elect of the forthcoming Congress, and not to settle any internal disputes relating to the politics of India.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
30th November, 1906.

The future of India.

10. The Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad), of the 30th November, say that the interest taken by His Highness the Prince of Wales in his Indian subjects manifests itself in the speech that he delivered on his return from India, and in his recent letters to the Government of Madras. His Highness feels the necessity of more cordial relations between the rulers and the ruled, considers that the Indians are deserving of more sympathetic treatment than what they receive, and wishes to receive fuller and more frequent information about his loving subjects here. The editor thinks that these are signs of a brighter future for India.

RAHBAR,
28th November, 1906.

The London Times and the Indian National Congress.

11. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th November, says that the action of the extremists, who wish to control the proceedings of the Congress with Mr. Tilak as its president, have changed the attitude of the London Times with the result that it commends the former leaders, whose conduct was characterized by moderation. He concludes with the remark that the existence of the extremists is necessary to infuse a new life into the country, and trusts that this view will be quite in harmony with public opinion on the subject.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
30th November, 1906.

The Indian National Congress.

12. The editor of the Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), while expressing his gratification in its issue of the 30th November, at the offer of tents by Lord Minto for the use of delegates at the forthcoming Congress, says that the step is unprecedented in the annals of the Congress.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
1st December, 1906.

The forthcoming Indian National Congress.

13. A correspondent in the Cawnpore Gazette of the 1st December exhorts every Indian who can afford to do so to attend the forthcoming Congress, and see for themselves what the leaders of the country are doing for the welfare of India.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
4th December, 1906.

The Indian National Congress.

14. The Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 4th December, says that Congressmen have every reason to rejoice at the offer ot tents made by Lord Minto, as this is the first favour shown by Government to the Indian National Congress. The editor thinks that His Excellency may have been actuated to show this favour by the remarks made by the Secretary of State in his Budget speech, and hopes that those who vilify the Congress as disloyal, will have every reason to be ashamed of their views on learning how Government has countenanced this national movement.

HINDOSTHAN,
7th December, 1906.

The Indian National Congress.

15. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 7th December, says that 36 delegates have been elected for the ensuing Congress at a meeting held at Benares on the 2nd instant. Babu Nil Madhab, a retired Judge, was in the chair.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th November, 1906.

The Muhammadans and politics.

16. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th November, disapproves of Haji Muhammad Ismail's views inculcating that Muhammadans should hold themselves aloof from politics. The editor remarks that the experience gained during the past twenty-five years clearly indicates that any further delay in making a representation to Government of the political needs of the Muhammadans will be suicidal.

SAHIFA,
5th and 19th November, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

17. The Sahifa (Bijnor), says in its combined issue of the 5th and 19th November, received on the 28th November, that the reply of the Viceroy, the comments of the English press, and the hostile criticism it has elicited from certain Congress organs, are in themselves sufficient to establish the importance of the Muhammadan deputation, and regrets to notice that its detractors have not the sense to understand that they are injuring the cause of the country by their hostile criticism.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th November, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

18. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th November, says that the views of the Hindu Press condemning the Muhammadan deputation and decrying it as a failure are uncalled for and the outcome of racial animosity. The editor remarks that the Muhammadans so far have no reason to doubt the genuineness of sympathy expressed by Lord Minto in his reply to the deputation, and that the agitation which it has caused amongst Hindus is in itself a guarantee of the success and important results it is calculated to achieve.

HINDUSTANI,
28th November, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

19. The Hindustani (Lucknow,) of the 28th November, while referring to the remarks of the Pioneer on an article contributed by Mr. Amir Ali in a recent number of the Nineteenth Century, says that the Anglo-Indian Press will approve of the views of the Muhammadans so long as they limit their hostile criticism to the Hindus, but no sooner than they charge the British Government with partiality, they are sure to meet with opposition. Adverting to the scheme proposed by Mr. Amir Ali, the editor remarks that it is much wider in its scope than that proposed by the Congress, that it will, with certain modifications, answer the purposes of the Congress and the deputation alike, and will practically be only another version of a proposal for the representative form of Government. He concludes with pointing out that the Muhammadans will have to co-operate with the Hindus as soon as they make a start in politics, though for the present they are labouring under the misapprehensions that the Hindus are grudging them their rights and privileges.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETE,
5th December, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

20. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 5th December, says that, considering that the Muhammadan deputation aimed solely at protecting the rights and privileges of Muhammadans, there seems no reason why it should form the subject of the hostile comments that it has drawn from the Hindu Press. It is true that the deputation exhorts the Muhammadans as a whole to hold themselves aloof from the Congress, deprecates agitation, and prefers to secure the rights of the Muhammadans by having recourse to cringing and dishumiliating tasteful methods; but had they recourse to the ways adopted by their Hindu brethren, they would surely have sacrificed the little honour, and other property that has been left to them after the Mutiny.

The greatest achievement of Sir Saiyid's life was his success in dissuading the Muhammadans from joining the Congress. Taking a just view of things, the Hindus and Muhammadans differ only on political matters, and, but for the strong and intemperate language adopted by the leaders of the Congress, the Muhammadans would have met them half way and worked side by side with them for the regeneration of India. The subterfuges adopted to detract from the merits of the deputation and their address are by no means an indication of the fraternal love that the Hindus profess to have for the Muhammadans.

MUSAFIR,
23rd November, 1906.

The loyalty and faithfulness of the Muhammadans.

21. The Musafir (Agra), of the 23rd November, says that the Muhammadans are constantly harping on their loyalty and faithfulness to Government, either with the view of insinuating that the Hindus are disloyal, or to impress Government with their sincerity by constant professions, knowing that they are not really loyal and faithful.

MUSAFIR,
23rd November, 1906.

The Muhammadans of Egypt and India.

22. The Musafir (Agra), of the 23rd November, while referring to the agitation of the Egyptian Muhammadans, which has led to the formation of the Egyptian Parliamentary committee in London, exhorts the Muhammadans of India to take a lesson from their Egyptian brethren, and to lay aside all racial differences and prejudices in promoting the interests of the country.

ANAND,
4th December, 1906.

The Indian colonists in South Africa.

23. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 4th December, questions the proprietary of Government tolerating the oppression of the Indian colonists at the hands of their Boer fellow-subjects in South Africa, and points out that the non-interference of the Liberal Government in the matter is extremely deplorable.

SAHIFA,
5th December, 1906.

Maltreatment of Indians in Southern Africa.

24. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 5th December, says that the treatment accorded to Indians in South Africa by the Boers, their refusal to treat them as citizens and to allow them to receive high education, is a blot on British administration. The Indians there have to submit to various indignities and acts of oppression at the hands of Englishmen who depend for the comforts they enjoy on their black fellow-subjects of His Majesty. It is very much to be regretted that their deputation, far from receiving any encouragement, was given to understand that Government considered any interference undesirable, as it contemplated shortly conferring self-government on the people of Transvaal. The editor considers that the action of Government in allowing one community to override the rights and interests of another is opposed to British justice, and a source of annoyance to thirty crores of Indians.

MUFID-I-AM,
24th November, 1906.

Simultaneous Civil Service Examination in England and India.

25. The Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of the 24th November, regrets to notice that certain Englishmen have been deluded into believing that India will be benefited if the Civil Service Examination is held simultaneously in England and India. The editor points out that such a course will be as injurious to Indian interests as the introduction of the representative form of Government. He points out that a proper distribution of appointments and the selection of a better class of Englishmen is essential to the proper administration of the country, and suggests that the Bengalis can never make good administrators.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
28th November, 1906.

Self-Government.

26. The Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 28th November, says that the British Government does not confer self-government on the Indians because they lack co-operation, though the Boers have been favoured with the privilege in spite of their revolutionary spirit which showed itself only recently in a disturbance in South Africa.

BHARAT JIWAN,
3rd December, 1906.

The proposed prosecution of the Civil and Military Gazette.

27. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 3rd December, says that the Punjab Government, while admitting the impropriety of certain language used by the Civil and Military Gazette, has refused to permit the Indian Association, Lahore, to prosecute the paper under section 153A, Indian Penal Code. The editor points out that the Punjab Government has displayed great indiscretion in refusing the permission at a time when the Punjabi is undergoing prosecution for a like offence.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
29th November, 1906

The Claims of Minorities.

28. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th November, says that the direct result of the all-India Muhammadan deputation to the Viceroy, so far, is the presentation of two similar prayers from two different sources, to the Government of India. The first is that of a Muhammadan Association in East Bengal, of which Nawab Salimullah is President, for the appointment of a Muhammadan Judge in the Calcutta High Court.

* * * * * * * * *

The second prayer emanates from our own neighbourhood. Maulvi Mehdi Ali, Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk, in his capacity as Secretary to the all-India Muhammadan Deputation Committee, has addressed a letter to the Private Secretary to the Viceroy suggesting the name of a particular gentleman for appointment as a Judge of the Punjab Chief Court.

* * * * * * * * *

It is a matter of great surprise that there should have been a radical misconception at the very root of the recommendation addressed to the Viceroy. Of all appointments Judgeships of High Courts are the last that should go by patronage, and it is because they have never been treated as such that the high reputation and prestige of High Courts in India have so long been maintained unimpaired. . . . When recommendations from outside will be permitted to have any weight in these appointments the decadence of the High Courts will be certain to follow.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
4th December, 1906.

The downfall of the British Empire.

29. The Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 4th December, reproduces an article from the Hindustan (Punjab) apprehending the downfall of the British Empire owing to the physical, moral and intellectual degeneration of the British nation, its flagging interest in maritime enterprise, and its growing dislike to rural life. The editor of the Hindustan also notes that the want of sympathy with Indians is another cause leading to its downfall, and points out that the stability of the British Empire in India will depend to a great extent on the sympathy of Englishmen for the Indians.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

The Amir's visit to India.

MUFID-I-AM,
24th November,
1906.

30. The Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of the 24th November, says that the Government of India has ordered that a sum of twenty lakhs of rupees be paid to the Amir of Kabul out of the sum due to him, so as to enable him to meet the expenses that he will have to incur in conection with his visit to India.

The visit of the Amir of Kabul to India.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
1st December, 1906.

31. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st December, says that of the forty chiefs invited to attend the Agra Durbar from the United Provinces, Rajputana and Central India, twenty-five only will likely be able to attend.

The visit of the Amir of Kabul to Bombay.

CAWNPORE
GAZETTE,
1st December, 1906.

32. The editor of the Cawnpore Gazette says in its issue of the 1st December, that a review of modern warships, cruisers, torpedo boats and guns will be very interesting to the Amir of Kabul during his stay at Bombay.

The visit of the Amir of Kabul to Delhi.

KANAUJ PUCNH,
1st December, 1906.

33. The Kanauj Punch, of the 1st December, says that the Muhammadans of Delhi are anxiously waiting for the day when the Amir of Kabul will offer his Id prayers in their midst.

High prices of provisions in Delhi.

ZUL QARNAIN,
28th November,
1906.

34. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 28th November, says that prices of articles of food are rising in Delhi owing to their being stored for the ensuing visit of the Amir of Kabul, and quotes an extract from the Vakil asking if Government finds itself helpless to protect the unfortunate poor against this artificial famine.

Improvements in Afghanistan.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
30th November,
1906.

35. The editor of the Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), while referring in its issue of the 30th November to the improvements effected in Kabul, particularly in the Military Department, quotes extracts from the autobiography of the late Amir Abdul Rahman Khan to illustrate his wisdom, foresight and statesmanship.

The Amir of Kabul.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
1st December, 1906.

36. The Kanauj Punch, of the 1st December, says that the Amir of Kabul has taken twenty lakhs of rupees from the British Government, and will send for such further sums as he requires from time to time in connection with his visit to India. The editor says that the money was counted down by the Peshawar Treasury without the least delay, and expresses a hope that the Amir of Kabul will spend it with the greatest lavishness.

Afghanistan.

SHAHNA-I-HIND,
1st December, 1906.

37. The Shahna-i-Hind (Meerut), of the 1st December, says that the late Amir Abdul Rahman Khan was of opinion that Afghanistan has to meet the Russians on the one side and the English on the other. He compares them to two millstones and remarks that his successor must always be prepared to resist their force if necessary. He exhorted him not to allow any foreign company to take root in his country, and considered that it was highly desirable that the army should be kept constantly in a high state of efficiency.

Trade between Kabul and India.

NIZAM-UL MULK,
30th November,
1906.

38. The editor of the Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), says in its issue of the 30th November, that the Amir of Kabul has recently passed strict orders directing that all consignments for India should in future be sent from Fort Abdullah and not from New Chaman. The editor thinks that this order has frustrated the bright hopes entertained by the directors of commerce at Karachi.

Trade between the Punjab and Afghanistan.

BHARAT, JIWAN,
3rd December, 1906.

39. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 3rd December, says that the merchants of the Punjab intend memorializing the Amir of Kabul with a view to open railway and telegraphic communications between Jamrud and Kabul. They will also ask for a removal of the difficulties in the way of trade, and a reduction of duties. The editor thinks that the Amir will not accede to the proposals, as they are directly in contravention of the policy of his father who was a great statesman.

III.—Native States.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
24th November, 1906.

Hyderabad.

40. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 24th November, deprecates the attitude of certain newspapers in making improper comments on the administration of Hyderabad, and points out that His Highness the Nizam and his ministers are doing all that can conduce to the happiness of his subjects, and that the administration of the state is in a high state of efficiency.

KAYASTH HITKARI,
1st December, 1906.

Arabs in Hyderabad.

41. The Kayasth Hitkari (Agra), of the 1st December, says that the Arabs in the Nizam's forces at Hyderabad besieged the office of Nawab Vazir Jang demanding payment of arrears of pay, and dispersed only after Sultan Nawaz Jang had assured them of payment. The editor remarks that any delay in satisfying the demand of the Arabs will, it is to be feared, be fraught with danger.

OUDH AKHBAR,
6th December, 1906.

The Arabs in Hyderabad.

42. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 6th December, says that the Arabs who have been ordered to be dismissed by the Nizam contend that, having left their country for good and devoted themselves to Military service for several generations that they have been in Hyderabad, they feel a return to Arabia to be quite out of the question, and that they are quite unfit for other pursuits. The editor referring to the views of a contemporary, who makes out that the Arabs are a dangerous element whether they are retained in service or dismissed, suggests that the problem is not at all a difficult one, and, even if a reference is made to the Suzerain power as to their future, it is to be hoped they will not be thrown adrift without sufficient provision. He remarks that such a course will be derogatory to the state, and there can be no doubt about the loyalty and honesty of the Arabs.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
24th November, 1906.

Rampur.

43. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 24th November, invites the attention of His Highness the Nawab of Rampur to the severity of his orders directing the sale of two ekkas by auction, merely because they happened to be on the same road on which His Highness was travelling with some ladies in a motor car. The editor points out the vast difference between the ways of His Highness and of the British Government in dealing with traffic or public roads.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
30th November, 1906.

Rampur.

44. The Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad), of the 30th November, says that bloodshed is becoming the order of the day at Rampur. The editor sees nothing very surprising in a recent case of nose-cutting where a native woman had her nose slit only a few days after a brutal assault on her father, since a European lady had been treated in a similar manner only a few day's prior to this occurrence.

JASUS,
28th November, 1906.

Jaipur.

45. A correspondent in the Jásus (Agra), of the 28th November, while joining issue with the editor on the maladministration of the state referred to in its previous issues, points out that the Maharaja of Jaipur takes an active share in state administration, and exercises effective control over the several departments of the state, so that his previous sanction has to be obtained where an innovation is needed or a departure made from the routine of business. He says that the Maharaja does not allow Indian or European officials to mix with him, or to see him except on business, that Balji and Thakur Zorawar Singh are officers of approved merit and integrity, and their advice on matters of state is always calculated to lead to public well-being and happiness. There is therefore no ground for interference on the part of the Suzerain Power, and the administration of the state though conducted on native lines, is not a whit inferior to that of Baroda, Mysore and Gwalior.

JASUS,
28th November, 1906.

Jaipur.

46. The Jásus (Agra), of the 28th November, says that the coalition of Pandit Jaideva Jai Dayal, Munshi Gobind Saran and Munshi Nand Kishore, who hold eminent offices in the Judicial department at Jaipur, is looked upon with deep concern, and the formidable aspect it has already assumed leads the public to apprehend serious and far-reaching consequences. The editor concludes with expressing a hope that he will be able to give a detailed account of this triumvirate in some subsequent issue.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th November,
1906.

Faridkot.

47. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th November, regrets to notice that the Maharaja of Faridkot has cut down the sums allotted by him for the payment of certain scholarships in the Central Hindu College, by one hundred rupees. The editor remarks that savings of this sort can do the state no good, and foreshadow adversity for the state.

JASUS,
28th November,
1906.

Kapurthala.

48. A correspondent in the Jásus (Agra) of the 28th November, invites the attention of the Maharaja of Kapurthala to the malpractices of a kanungo and a certain patwari in the Kapurthala tahsil, and suggests their transfer to the accounts branch where they can have no opportunity for corruption. He points out also that respectable men with good educational qualifications should be selected to fill the vacancies occasioned by their transfer.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
29th November,
1906.

The Maharaja of Bikanir.

49. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 29th November, says that it is very rarely that we find an Indian Prince like the Maharaja of Bikanir drawing a gloomy picture of his State in the presence of the Viceroy.

* * * * * * * *

The fiction of continued and growing prosperity found no supporter in this truthful and earnest Prince. To a State so conditioned as Bikanir the Viceroy's visit must have entailed very heavy and unwise expenditure.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
30th November,
1906.

Scholarships in Kashmir.

50. The editor of the Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), expresses his gratification in its issue of the 30th November at the grants of scholarships in Kashmir with a view to enable students to prosecute their studies in foreign countries, and expresses a hope that the course adopted will bear fruitful results in the near future.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
30th November,
1906.

Proposal to bring Native States under the operation of the Arms Act.

51. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 30th November, says that Indians are treated no better than the Boer prisoners who were disarmed after the Boer war, to signify that they were captives, though no other restraint was placed on them. The editor points out that endeavours are being made to bring Native States under the operation of the Arms Act, and Government has made a beginning with Mysore which is most under British influence. The editor says that orders have already been issued to ascertain the number of arms now possessed by the people of Mysore, and expresses his apprehension that the little confidence that now exists between Government and its subjects is daily diminishing.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
2nd December,
1906.

Native Princes.

52. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 2nd December, says that many people would doubtless wish for nothing so much as to find themselves in the place of our Native Princes. We expect, however, if such an exchange were possible, the ambitious individual would not take long to abandon his great position for his own humble state in life. What is a ruling Prince in India? He is supposed to rule over millions of subjects, but has he any power independently of the Resident or the Political Agent? He is in a state of constant anxiety and uncertainty. Nor is his position always safe. What had the ex-Maharaja Holkar done that he was compelled to abdicate his throne? He is a very intelligent independent man, but he had to give up his birthright because Lord Curzon was annoyed with him. It is easier to turn out a Native Prince from his throne than a peasant from his holding. And the position of Princes has other penalties. When there is a Darbar or a Levee there is no escape for them. We have seen a Native Prince—an old man, nearly bent double with age and illness, decrepit, feeble, compelled to exhibit his weakness to assembled thousands in a public Darbar. Another Native Prince, suffering from fever, had to travel a great distance to attend a similar function. The man in the street is quite at liberty to stay at home, or to look at the show, but princes have no such immunity.

ADVOCATE,
2nd December,
1906.

Native states in the Empire.

53. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 2nd December, says that where Indians themselves have little or no hand in the administration of the country, it is, perhaps, the height of folly to think that people living in Native States would be given any opportunity to express an opinion on the government of the Indian Empire.

If not their subjects, why not the ruling Chiefs and Princes themselves. These have indeed no place in the scheme of government. Nor are they consulted on vital questions of policy or defence. And yet many big States maintain what are known as the Imperial Service Troops, who are to help in the defence of the British Empire against any foreign aggression. The liberty that the masters of such Troops enjoy lies in the paying for their maintenance, and applying for the privilege of serving the cause of the Empire in any war, leaving the control of the bands both in times of peace and hostilites to the British Officers commanding them.

* * * * * * *

Day by day the relation between the paramount power and the protected states is being brought closer and closer, and the subjects of the latter are no less loyal and devoted to the King-Emperor. British justice equity and fairness require under the circumstances that the people of Native States equally with those of British India be given full rights to be largely associated with the administration of the Indian Empire.

IV.—ADMINISTRATION.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

RAHBAR,
28th November, 1906.

The appointment of Mr. Emerson as a High Court Judge.

54. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th November, asks how Mr. Emerson can be looked upon as fit to be a High Court Judge, when he has failed as a Magistrate, and points out that his anti-swadeshi views alone should not turn the balance in his favour, when his poor knowledge of law renders him quite unfit to occupy the bench of the High Court. The editor remarks that Government will not be justified in placing the lives and liberties of His Majesty's subjects in the hands of an incompetent man like Mr. Emerson, whose services could be best utilized in the Opium Department.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
30th November, 1906.

Appointment of a Muhammadan Judge to the Calcutta High Court.

55. The editor of the Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), while referring in its issue of the 30th November to the vacancy about to occur in the Calcutta High Court, suggests the names of three eminent Muhammadans, who are in every respect qualified for a seat on the bench of the High Court; and remarks that the appointment of a Muhammadan Judge will be a matter of rejoicing not only to the Muhammadans of Bengal, but also to the entire Muhammadan community of India.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
3rd December, 1906.

The appointment of a Muhammadan Judge in the High Court of Bengal.

56. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 3rd December feels highly gratified at learning that the Government of India contemplates the appointment of a Muhammadan Judge to the vacancy arising in the Calcutta High Court on the retirement of Mr. Justice Chander Madhab Ghosh. The editor awaits anxiously for the announcement of the name of the new Judge, so as to be able to find out whether the choice falls on one of the men proposed from these provinces or on some barrister from Calcutta.

ANAND,
4th December, 1906.

The appointment of a Muhammadan Judge in the Chief Court of the Punjab.

57. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 4th December, while referring to the private letter sent by Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk to the Viceroy, requesting him to appoint a Muhammadan Judge in the Chief Court of the Punjab, points out the necessity of entertaining Judges from every community, if the request is granted.

HINDUSTANI,
28th November, 1906.

The Punjabi and Nawab Mohsin-ul-mulk.

58. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 28th November, while referring to a letter published in the Punjabi (Lahore), purporting to have been addressed by Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk, in his private capacity, to His Excellency the Viceroy of India, agrees with the Punjabi in thinking that there seems no reason why Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk should have proposed that Mr. Justice Lal Chand should be kept out of a permanent appointment which he richly deserves after having officiated so creditably, only to make room for Mr. Shahdin simply because he is a Muhammadan. There are three permanent District Judges in the Punjab and all of them are Muhammadans, but the Sikhs and the Hindus have never had any occasion for grumbling. The Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk may have some special reasons of his own for his conduct in the present matter regarding which he may inform the Punjabi. It was quite possible for him to propose the appointment of Mr. Shahdin in place of some English barrister, and thus the Indians would have secured two seats on the bench of the Chief Court.

AL-ISLAM,
7th December 1906.

The Punjabi and Nawab Mohsin-ul-mulk.

59. Al-Islam (Aligarh), of the 7th December, while dwelling on the want of etiquette in Congress organs, and expatiating on the merits of Mr. Shahdin, considers that the Punjabi has been guilty of gross impropriety in publishing a private letter addressed by Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk to His Excellency the Viceroy, suggesting the appointment of Mr. Shahdin to a permanent vacancy about to arise in the Punjab Chief Court, irrespective of the claims of Mr. Lal Chand, who has been officiating for a considerable length of time. The editor thinks that Mr. Shahdin is entitled to precedence over Mr. Justice Lal Chand by virtue of his merit, and points out that the letter of Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk viewed in its proper light, is not an attack on Mr. Lal Chand.

OUDH AKHBAR,
6th December, 1906.

Justice in India.

60. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 6th December, says that justice in India is far more expensive than it has ever been. He regrets to find that the majority of officers administering justice do not take sufficient pains with their work, and do all that they can to persuade parties to come to an amicable settlement. Some form their opinions beforehand, and no amount of evidence and argument will prevail on them to change their views. Many of the difficulties that the parties have to face are due to the fact that courts of appeal seldom or never make any comments on the conduct of subordinate courts, not to speak of calling upon them for explanations with regard to irregularities. He concludes with the remark that the subordinate courts often have to take a course pleasing to their official superiors, as happened in the Barisal case, and it is highly desirable that public opinion should be trained to exercise effective control over them, as no amount of promotion without control will check dishonesty.

MUSAFIR,
23rd November, 1906.

The Barisal cases.

61. The Musafir (Agra), of the 23rd November, while referring to the conclusion of the cases that arose out of the Barisal incident, and the acquittal of Mr. Kemp and other officials concerned, says that the decision given is in utter defiance of the opinion expressed by Lord Curzon, who pointed out that the British rule in India depends upon its justice, and not on the forces at the command of Government.

JASUS,
28th November, 1906.

The Lucknow student's case.

62. The Jásus (Agra), of the 28th November, considers that the Cantonment Magistrate of Lucknow was influenced by racial prejudice in convicting a Bengali youth charged with abusing a European magistrate, and that his refusal to admit the boy to bail, though the offence was bailable, shows that he was actuated by vindictiveness in dealing with the case.* The editor then compares the severity with which the accused was dealt in this case with the leniency shown in meting out a very light sentence to a European charged with outraging the modesty of an Indian lady, and points out that far from impressing Indians with the dignity of the ruling race, such official conduct is sure to alienate their feelings from Englishmen and lower them in the estimation of Indians.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
1st December, 1906.

A bad livelihood case in Meerut.

63. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st December, while referring to the conviction of one Pandit Basdeo alias Battu Lal of Hapur, a Municipal Commissioner, licensed opium vendor and contractor, expresses its disapprobation of the conduct of the District Magistrate who discredited eighty-four respectable witnesses produced by the defence. The editor remarks that police oppression will know no bounds if the voice of respectable persons can have no weight against the reports made by the police.

ARYA MITRA,
1st December, 1906.

Cultivation of opium in China.

64. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st December, while referring to the stringent measures taken by the Government of China to discourage the cultivation of opium and to the proposed increase of import duty, asks if Government will not abolish its trade in India.

Bogus barons.

65. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 2nd December, says that Lieutenant Baron von Ditten, a young Norwegian, who is alleged to have victimized Messrs. Whiteaway, Laidlaw and Company, Rangoon, to the extent of Rs. 210, was placed before the Magistrate and admitted to bail upon signing a bond for Rs. 200 in his personal recognizance.

In the Straits papers accounts appear of a bogus Baron who is alleged to have executed similar shady transactions while he was in Java, Singapore and Far Eastern ports.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
2nd December,
1906.

Aligarh Notes.

66. Legal Digestion, a correspondent in the Indian People (Allahabad), of the 2nd December, makes the following comments on the delay that occurs in the Court of the District Judge of Aligarh in delivering judgments after a case has been heard and argued:—It is very difficult to please all, but there are some people who are pleased neither with one thing nor with the other. That is a weakness. And they make a sad show of this weakness, when they have the misfortune of going to a court of justice. If a Magistrate or a Judge wants to expedite the work by ordering a march-past of the witnesses before him, allowing the pleaders to argue the case, and himself writing the judgment simultaneously, sometimes himself winning the race by finishing the judgment before the arguments are over, such a man, say these people, is a hasty man. If, on the other hand, a Magistrate or a Judge hears the witnesses, listens to arguments and takes a long time in thinking over the case, they say he is a lazy man. And to this latter class of officers is our own District Judge said to belong. Because he takes months and sometimes even a year in digesting the facts of a case and thinking over it, the pleaders and litigants complain that he does not do much work. But their opinion is of no value, as they are interested persons. It is the High Court which is the best judge of these methods, and it has laid down that, the more time a Judge takes in delivering his judgment, the more is he considered to have thought over the case. But I see no reason why our Judge should tax his memory so much for the sake of these unappreciative people, who care more for the quantity than the quality of the work. When they are hasty it is better to pay them in their own coin.

ANAND,
4th December, 1906.

Juvenile offenders.

67. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 4th December, says that Magistrates generally will do well to follow the noble example set by Sahibzada Wali Muhammad of Alipur in dealing with juvenile offenders, whom necessity compels to commit petty thefts. The Sahibzada, finding that a boy aged fourteen had stolen a warm shirt to protect himself against the inclemency of the weather, paid the fine he imposed, out of his pocket and gave necessary clothing to the boy.

ANAND,
4th December, 1906.

Drunkenness in India.

68. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 4th December, regrets to learn from the last report on the Excise Administration in the United Provinces that drunkenness has increased considerably. The editor points out that such increase is fraught with serious danger to the country, asks the Educational Department to take steps to save the people from its evil effects, and exhorts the Government to restrict its use by legislation.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
24th November,
1906.

Patrol of roads in Moradabad city.

69. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 24th November, suggests a reversion to the old system of constables shouting out certain watch-words while patrolling their beats at night, and points out the necessity for building a new outpost near the Gala Kati-ki-Masjid, as the locality is well suited for a rendezvous for thieves and other bad characters.

ROHILKHAND
GAZETTE,
1st December, 1906.

The Police of the United Provinces.

70. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st December, says that there is nothing peculiar in the conduct of the police as compared with other departments. Bribery and oppression are met with everywhere, and there seems no reason why the public should be exercised regarding the reform of the police who are responsible for the peace and happiness of the country, and have to discharge many onerous duties. Leaving the ignorant masses aside, one finds that backdoor influence plays an important part in Indian society, where culture and enlightenment are required to yield to personal interest and private recommendations, and it frequently happens that influence is brought to bear upon police officers by men of high position to act dishonestly. The public have got into the habit of serving their ends without having recourse to law, and it thus happens that a police officer who fails to oblige them at the risk of his reputation and appointment, incurs their displeasure and lays himself open to hostile criticism. It is hoped, however, that the progress of education will considerably improve the position of the police. The Police Commission would not have formed the bad opinion it did about the police if it had taken this point into its consideration.

(c).—Finance and Taxation.

Pensionable service under Government.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
30th November,
1906.

71. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 30th November, says that a reduction in the period of pensionable service is under consideration, and it is to be hoped that, subject to the approval of the Financial Secretary, good service and invalid pensions will hereafter be given after 25 and 20 years service respectively. The editor remarks that these alterations are proposed in the interests of Englishmen in particular, as they stay far away from home for a considerable length of time, and that the Indians profit by the scheme only because Government has to keep up appearances. He remarks that Indians are all the same undergoing physical deterioration, though Government may feel reluctant to accept this statement, and thinks that premature old age is brought on them chiefly owing to the growing poverty of the country.

(d).—Municipal and Cantonment Affairs.

Sanitary arrangements in Moradabad.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
24th November,
1906.

72. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 24th November, points out the necessity of better scavenging arrangements, and that the carelessness evinced at present in cleansing dust-bins is calculated to induce plague and other pestilential diseases in the town.

Complaints against the water-rate clerk at Agra.

JASUS,
28th November,
1906.

73. The Jásus (Agra), of the 28th November, while inviting the attention of the Local Municipal Secretary to the conduct of one Yawar Husain, a water-rate clerk, points out that his conduct if unchecked will one day involve the Secretary in serious trouble.

Sanitary arrangements in Benares.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
1st December, 1906.

74. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st December, says that the existing drainage system and the objectionable stench emanating from the putrid water in the Suraj Kund at Benares are calculated to make the atmosphere very unhealthy, and considering that plague generally breaks out about this part of the year, it is highly desirable that steps should be taken to improve the existing state of things in the Benares Municipality.

Carcases of animals.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR,
4th December,
1906.

75. The Sulaimani Akhbár, of the 4th December, suggests the desirability of carrying carcases of animals dying in streets in closed vans, instead of dragging them along the road. The editor is of opinion that the present system is not only revolting but tends also to contaminate the atmosphere.

(e).—Education.

English education.

BHARAT-SU-DASHA PRABARTAK,
November,
1906.

76. The Bharat-su-dasha Prabartak (Agra), for November, says that English education has a tendency to lower morals, and refers to the conduct of Lord Clive in signing a document with a view to gain thirty lakhs of rupees, though he knew that he was doing wrong, in support of his assertion.

The Convocation of the University of Allahabad.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
24th November,
1906.

77. The editor of the Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Gorakhpur), says in its issue of the 24th November that Pandit Sundar Lal's speech at the last convocation meeting of the Allahabad University cannot fail to win public approbation, and one cannot but feel extremely gratified at learning that graduates in the United Provinces take sufficient interest in matters relating to education, and are endeavouring to continue their scientific researches after completing their college career. He then says that the Hon'ble Vice-Chancellor has carefully avoided every reference to the existing defects in the University, and concludes with making specific reference to the attitude of the Syndicate towards oriental languages.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th November,
1906.

The Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

78. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th November, while referring to the complaints of the students of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, regarding the very unsatisfactory boarding arrangements all the year round and during the month of Ramzan particularly, invites the serious attention of Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk to the existing state of affairs, and suggests the desirability of early steps being taken to remedy the evil. The editor further suggests that special care should be taken in this respect during the month of Ramzan so as to protect the Managing Committee from the charge of disregard of the religious needs of students within the college compound and of other matters.

JASUS,
28th November,
1906.

Unsatisfactory boarding arrangements at the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

79. The Jásus (Agra), of the 28th November, invites the attention of the Trustees of the College to the unsatisfactory boarding arrangements at the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, and expresses a hope that they will not wreak their vengeance on the students who have come forward manfully, and pointed out the defects in the existing arrangements.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th November,
1906.

The Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

80. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th November, regrets to find that the ever-increasing greed of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, as evinced by the attempt of the Trustees to make collections on the one-rupee-fund system at the celebration of the Id-ul-Fitr is becoming a subject for comment. The editor suggests that the college can very well meet its expenses, and deprecates this objectionable way of taxing the pockets of poor and self-denying Muhammadans. He refers also to the proposal made to the Nawab of Bhawalpur to go on his pilgrimage to Mecca only with a limited number of men, and to make over the rest of the money for the benefit of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College.

AL-ISLAM,
30th November,
1906.

The Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

81. The editor of Al-Islam (Aligarh), expresses his regret in its issue of the 30th November at the half-heartedness of the members of "The One Rupee Fund Committee" in the discharge of their sacred duty of raising the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, into a Muhammadan University. He concludes with the remark that the degraded position that the Muhammadans hold is the necessary consequence of their incompetence and ignorance.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th November,
1906

A graduate of the Bombay University in Manchester.

82. The Rohilkhand Gazette, (Bareilly), of the 24th November, applauds the action of the Bombay University in discontinuing the scholarship of one of its Hindu graduates for writing and publishing a seditious article on India and England, while stopping at Manchester, where he had been sent with a view to complete his studies. The defence set up by the student was looked upon as impertinent.

ARYA MITRA,
24th November,
1906.

The visit of English editors to India.

83. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 24th November, says that Mr. Stead and other editors who proposed to come out with him to India with a view to attend the ensuing National Congress, have been obliged to postpone their visit on account of the dissatisfaction and agitation caused all over England by the Education Bill. The editor remarks that high education is impossible in a country where religion is not an active power, and does not appeal sufficiently to the feelings of the people, and exhorts Englishmen to adopt the Vedic religion and to act up to its dictates, which alone can help them in establishing peace all over Europe.

ZUL-QARNAIN,
28th November,
1906.

A grievance of the Budaun students.

84. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 28th November, says that the Hindu students of Budaun High School are extremely dissatisfied with their Head Master, who prevented them from holding the anniversary of their club on the occasion of the last Diwali festival. The letters published in the Musáfir (Agra), and the Citizen (Allahabad), show that a variety of charges have been brought against him. Another letter in a recent issue of the Citizen throws considerable light on the real facts, and it is to be hoped that the measures taken will not succeed in intimidating the Head Master into altering the course he has adopted after mature consideration.

JASUS,
28th November,
1906.

Proposed reduction of fees in schools.

85. The Jásus (Agra), of the 28th November, while referring to the proposed reduction of fees in the Anglo-Vernacular primary schools in the Punjab, points out that the excessive fees in the High Schools likewise deters the generality of people from educating their children, and expresses a hope that the Local Government of these Provinces will likewise give the matter its earnest consideration.

AL-ISLAM,
30th November,
1906.

Muhammadan Educational Conference.

86. Al-Islam (Aligarh) of the 30th November, while announcing the dates of the ensuing Muhammadan Educational Conference and the offer of Nawab Salim-ul-lah Khan to entertain all visitors who attend the Conference as his guests, exhorts the Muhammadans to muster strong at Dacca, which is the centre of anti-partition agitation, and to see for themselves the incalculable good done by the partition of Bengal.

AL-ISLAM,
30th November,
1906.

Urdu.

87. Al-Islam (Aligarh), of the 30th November, expresses its gratification at the refusal of the local government to issue a Nagri edition of the Government Gazette, and exhorts the Muhammadans to resuscitate the Anjumani Taraqqi Urdu, which has been dormant for several years past.

OUDH AKHBAR,
3rd December,
1906.

Lala Lajpat Rai at Bombay.

88. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 3rd December, says that Lala Lajpat Rai addressed about five thousand men at Bombay on the 20th of November last, condemning the existing policy of Government in matters of education, as it tends to discourage independence of opinion and freedom of thought. He pointed out that the existing system is not at all fitted to prepare people to fight the battle of life, and urged the public therefore to open their own schools and colleges, which should be quite independent of Government. He pointed out the necessity of educational missionaries going from village to village and inculcating that national education on the lines indicated, is essential to the regeneration of the country.

AKHBAR-I-SULAIMANI,
4th December,
1906,

The present system of education.

89. The Akhbar-i-Sulaimani (Benares), of the 4th December, says that the present system of education in India tends to demoralize the students, who become quite unmindful of the good manners they learn at home. It is therefore highly desirable that Government should give the matter its serious consideration, and invite the attention of the Directors of Education in the several provinces to the matter of the formation of character in the Indian student.

(f).—Agriculture and questions affecting the land.

TAFRIH,
28th November,
1906.

The poverty of India.

90. The editor of the Tafrih (Lucknow), suggests in its issue of the 28th November, the desirability of ascertaining the views of the Indian agriculturists regarding their difficulties and requirements, and hopes that such a course will considerably facilitate any attempts made to improve their situation, and to remove the existing poverty of India.

ARYA MITRA,
1st December, 1906.

Apprehended famine in India.

91. The Arya Mitra (Agra), while referring in its issue of the 1st December, to the fact that the good rice crop has alleviated the distress of the people at Barisal to some extent, points out the danger of an impending famine all over India unless steps are taken to prevent the export of grain to foreign countries.

HINDOSTHAN,
1st December, 1906.

Agricultural improvements in Bengal.

92. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 1st December, while referring to the proposed construction of wells by zamindars and tenants for purposes of irrigation and to the adoption of measures to improve the condition of forests in Bengal, suggests the desirability of taking similar steps in these provinces.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th November,
1906.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller's resignation.

93. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th November, says that the publication of papers relating to Sir Bampfylde Fuller's resignation show that he was justified in issuing the circulars and orders he did, as the agitation that prevailed all over Bengal made such a course highly desirable. The very fact that Sir Bampfylde Fuller's successor is walking in his footsteps is a clear indication of the soundness of his policy, and proves beyond all doubt that the Government of India made a great mistake in accepting his resignation.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
1st December, 1906.

The resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

94. The Kanauj Punch, of the 1st December, says that the publication of papers regarding the resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller shows that His Honour was fully justified in recommending the disaffiliation of two schools at Sirajganj from the University, and the true picture is very different from that painted by the Bengalis.

ARYA MITRA,
1st December 1906.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

95. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st December, while referring to the proposal emanating from the European merchants of Assam and Bengal to build a memorial in honour of Sir Bampfylde Fuller, points out that such a course if carried into effect will be calculated to widen the gulf between Europeans and Bengalis.

VAISHYA HITKARI,
November 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

96. A correspondent in the Vaishya Hitkari (Meerut), for November, while referring to the progress that the swadeshi movement is making in Bengal and the Punjab, regrets to find that the United Provinces are considerably behind them. He points out that Europeans are monopolizing the entire trade of the country, and suggests that sound training in business and technical education are essential to the regeneration of India. He points out the necessity of creating sufficient interest in swadeshi manufactures in the artizans and the public alike, and advocates the desirability of selling indigenous products at moderate prices.

MUSAFIR,
23rd November, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

97. The Musafir (Agra), of the 23rd November, says that the success of the swadeshi movement has so considerably widened the gulf between Englishmen and Indians, that even missionaries find it necessary to devise means for establishing more friendly relations between the rulers and the ruled. The editor concludes with thanking the Anglican Church Mission for devoting so much attention and time to this question at their last conference at Lahore.

TAFRIH,
28th November, 1906.

Swadeshi meeting at Lucknow.

98. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 28th November, says that a meeting was held at Lucknow on the 11th November, with a view to promote swadeshi interests. The audience numbered about one thousand, and vows were taken by the local confectioners to use purely country sugar. Sah Bahbaji, a leading local rais, was in the chair.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
18th December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

99. The (Cawnpore Gazette) of the 18th December, says that a large swadeshi meeting was held at Lahore under the presidency of Mr. Ram Bhaj Datta Chaudhri, who pointed out that this movement has nothing to do with politics and is purely patriotic.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
1st December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

100. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 1st December, while expressing its appreciation of the views regarding the swadeshi movement, expressed in the Indian Christians (Calcutta) hopes that the community to which the organ belongs will do its best to promote indigenous arts and manufactures.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE.

The swadeshi movement.

101. The editor of the Cawnpore Gazette, while referring to the hostile attitude of the Cantonment Magistrate of Jullundar towards the swadeshi movement, and to his conduct in effacing the word swadeshi from a sign-board with his own hand, points out that such conduct is calculated to give fresh vigour to the movement as was evinced by the subsequent conduct of the residents of Jullundar.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
1st December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

102. The Kanauj Punch, of the 1st December, says that Pandit Rambhaj Datt, the great swadeshi leader had a turban of foreign manufacture on his head, while decrying such manufactures in a recent lecture at Lahore. The editor remarks that example is better than precept, and points out that no amount of exhortation will do any good, unless the promoters of the swadeshi movement themselves set a good example to the audience.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
1st December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

103 The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st December, publishes a dialogue between a husband and his wife showing that articles of foreign manufacture are used in private even by some of the greatest promoters of the swadeshi movement.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
1st December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

104. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st December, says that the swadeshi movement has wrought a great revolution throughout India, and that it has almost annihilated the American and Russian trade in kerosine oil. The editor also points out that the movement is making considerable progress in Japan, where necessaries of life are manufactured at a much cheaper rate than in Europe. The movement is calculated to do good to Hindus and Muhammadans alike. High education has been made almost impracticable for Indians. It is therefore desirable that Hindus and Muhammadans who have lived side by side like brethren for several centuries should co-operate in promoting the swadeshi movement, which affords great possibilities for the Indians. He points out that foreign sugar has practically been boycotted from Indian markets, and expresses a hope that Indians will patronize indigenous products, which are better calculated to suit their requirements than foreign commodities.

HINDOSTHAN,
2nd December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

105. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 2nd December, says that Indians should not discard articles of foreign manufacture if they wish to make the swadeshi movement a success. Their first object should be to promote technical education and to bring indigenous manufactures to a state of perfection. They should establish technical schools and factories, and when a sufficiently large number of Indians have been trained, and when Indian manufactures can compete with foreign commodities they they can discard the latter altogether.

HINDOSTHAN,
2nd December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

106. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 2nd December, expresses its gratification at learning that the Calcutta people have established a factory at the cost of thirteen lakhs of rupees, and expresses a hope that similar steps will be taken in other provinces to stimulate indigenous arts and industries.

BHARAT JIWAN,
3rd December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

107. A correspondent in the Bharat Jiwan, of the 3rd December, regrets to find that certain tradesmen are swindling the public by selling foreign articles as indigenous products.

BHARAT JIWAN,
3rd December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

108. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 3rd December, says that the Marwaris, Khatris and Saraswat Brahmins have taken vows to refrain from using foreign sugar and ghi mixed with fatty substances. A correspondent points out that urine, bone-ash and bones of serpents are employed in purifying foreign sugar which is rendered thereby very deleterious in its effects. Another correspondent says that it is purified by means of blood of cows and swine, and that it is injurious to the public health.

ANAND,
4th December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

109. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 4th December, says that weekly swadeshi meetings continue to be held in Lucknow, and that Babu Banarsi Das is promoting the cause of the swadeshi movement with unflagging zeal.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ
4th December 1906.

The swadeshi movement in Lucknow.

110. The Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 4th December, says that a swadeshi meeting was held at Makbulganj (Lucknow) on the 25th November last. The audience numbered about two thousand. Babu Bhabhu Nath Banerji, Babu Jaswant Singh, Pandit Kashi Prasad, Pandit Suraj Prasad, and Lala Banarsi Das, who were the chief speakers, exhorted the audience to take practical steps to promote the swadeshi movement. The editor points out that the Indians have to thank Lord Curzon for awakening them to their existing situation, and for recruiting them in the cause of the country.

HINDOSTHAN,
6th December 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

111. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 6th December, is gratified to learn that the unmarried young folk in certain villages in Bengal have vowed to marry only such women as know the art of spinning and weaving; and commends the suggestion of the Dacca Prakash that the girls should refuse to marry men who use foreign articles.

OUDH AKHBAR,
6th December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

112. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 6th December, says that while addressing a large public meeting at Bombay, Babu Surendra Nath Banerji pointed out that Bande Matram is the national by-word for peace, security and good will, that it is a link that unites Indians as a whole, and not a war-cry as suggested by prejudiced persons. Referring to the swadeshi vastu Pracharni sabha organized by Doctor Deshmukh, he said he was glad to notice that most of its members were young men, and remarked that on them depends the future of the swadeshi movement all over the country. He pointed out that self-sacrifice was essential to its success, that Gujrati Musalmans, Mahrattas, Bhatiyas, and in fact people belonging to all communities inhabiting India, should co-operate to promote swadeshi interests, and that Bombay had a very wide field before it in promoting indigenous arts and manufactures. He concluded with exhorting the audience to combine cheapness with efficiency so as to be able to secure the several marts of India for their countrymen, without which success was impossible.

SAHIFA,
19th November,
1906.

Strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

113. The Sahifa (Bijnor), says in its combined issue of the 5th and 19th November, received on the 28th November, that the Hindus and Muhammadans alike are to blame for the strained relations between the two communities. Referring to the Bengalis the editor gives them due credit for their superior intelligence and educational qualifications, and points out that, though the members of the deputation look upon them with contempt and regard then as belonging to an inferior race, yet their utterances are read with the greatest attention by certain Englishmen. The absurdity of Babu Surendro Nath's coronation and the hostile criticism of the deputation have been a source of great annoyance to the Muhammadans.

The Bengalis have begun to look upon themselves as a nation, and it is highly desirable that steps should be taken to check further development of this idea. He then dwells on the physical superiority of the Muhammadans, and points out that they hate the Hindus, and do not wish that political and administrative powers should be conferred on them, as they belong to an inferior nation and are altogether wanting in manliness. He thinks that it is impossible to form Indians into one nation and that, were it not for the benign rule of the British Government, the frontier Muhammadans would have held again them in thraldom. Judging by western ideas intellectual superiority deserves great respect, but the Muhammadans of India look upon themselves as conquerors, love war, supply men for the forces in the Native States, and have no sympathy with the good natured and peace-loving Hindu whom centuries of slavery have made so devoid of courage and manliness as to make him an object of derision. The Muhammadans can obey an Englishman but not a Hindu. The Hindus are deceiving such of the Englishmen as are not sufficiently acquainted with the ways of life in India by speaking as if they were the representatives of the country. Lord Minto's reply explains that it is possible that the Government of India may include the ablest men amongst the representatives of the people in the administration of the country, but it goes without saying that western modes of Government are not suited to the Indians.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
24th November,
1906.

The strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

114. A correspondent in the Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Gorakhpur), of the 24th November, says that the agitation caused by the Muhammadan deputation has afforded an opportunity to the Anglo-Indian Press for laughing at the Indians. He regrets to find that the Hindus and Muhammadans do not co-operate in the interests of the country, though the disunion between them has been instrumental in bringing them to their present degradation. He suggests that the Muhammadans are making a great mistake in thinking that they will ingratiate themselves in the favour of Government by opposing the Hindus, and asks if the treatment given to Wajid Ali Shah of Lucknow, the Nawab of Murshidabad and the King of Burma was in any way the result of disloyalty on their part. Taking the conduct of the Hindus in its worst light, Government cannot leave them out of consideration, nor can it give any precedence to one community over the other. If the Muhammadans have reason to be dissatisfied with the conduct of their Hindu brethren they should point out their shortcomings and ask them to mend their ways. He thinks that the Anglo-Indians are mainly responsible for the strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans, points out that their co-operation is necessary for the regeneration of the country, and concludes with the remark that disunion between Hindus and Muhammadans will tend to create similar feelings between Shias and Sunnis, and that they will ultimately find themselves too weak to resist their Anglo-Indian friends whose one object seems to be to divide and rule. It is therefore desirable that the two communities should neglect points of difference between them as far as possible, and co-operate with one another in the common cause of the country.

Strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th November,
1906.

115. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th November, while referring to the existing political agitation in India, says that the attitude of the Bengalis is, to all intents and purposes, calculated to promote the interests of the Hindus at the cost of the Muhammadans, and points out that if the Muhammadans act in a like spirit, union between the two communities will become impossible, and the Indian National Congress will become a purely Hindu organization.

Strained relations between Europeans and Indians.

JASUS,
28th November,
1906.

116. The Jásus (Agra), of the 28th November, says that the Pioneer seems to realize the situation now that it recommends free intercourse betweens Europeans and well educated Indians, and points out that openings in Government service, or a bestowal of representative rights cannot by themselves conduce to genuine sympathy between the rulers and the ruled. The editor suggests that the advice proferred is only an ingenious dodge, to enlist the sympathies of the leading Indians in behalf of Englishmen and to alienate them from the masses. He concludes with pointing out that the Indian leaders have the good sense to see through the trick of the Pioneer, to understand that the masses are the bulwark of the country, and that it will not do to lose sight of their interests.

Strained relations between Europeans and Indians.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
28th November,
1906.

117. The Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of 28th November, while eulogizing the Revd. C. F. Andrews for his honest confession that the conduct of the Europeans in their dealings with Indians is far from what it should be, suggests that both parties should refrain from publishing articles that are calculated to widen the gulf between them, and should endeavour to cultivate friendly feelings towards one another.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
28th November,
1906.

118. The Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 28th November, while referring to an article contributed by Maulvi Zaka-ulla in a recent issue of the Aligarh Institute Gazette, wherein an attempt has been made to show that a difference of religion renders union between Hindus and Muhammadans impracticable, deplores that a leader of his experience and intelligence should have fallen into such an egregious error. The editor exhorts both Hindus and Muhammadans to make common cause for the regeneration of India, and trusts that if their actions are characterized with sincerity, their efforts are sure to be crowned with success.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

RAHBAR,
28th November,
1906.

119. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th November, while referring to an application by the Assistant Secretary of the Anjuman-i-Islamia, Noakhali, wherein the agent of the R. S. and Co. of Barisal was requested to replace his Hindu sub-agent at Noakhali by appointing a Muhammadan, says that such conduct shows extreme narrow-mindedness, and indicates that tension of feeling between Hindus and Muhammadans is continually on the increase.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

OUDH AKHBAR,
30th November,
1906.

120. A correspondent in the Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 30th November, while referring to the views of the Muhammadan deputation, says that there is not one Hindu who is against co-operation with Muhammadans, or against sharing their rights and privileges with their Muhammadan brethren, provided they are actuated by motives of sincere friendship. The Muhammadans are in a minority and they have to bear in mind that their success depends materially on co-operation with the Hindus, who are progressing steadily while they themselves are going backwards. The Muhammadans themselves are responsible for the difficulties that are constantly cropping up in their way. They conjure up imaginary fears, and if there is anything that stands in the way of national progress and patriotism it is the attitude of a certain section of Muhammadans who allow themselves to be led by such men as Maulvi Zaka-ulla, Mr. Hasan Nizami and Mr. Muhammad Ismail Khan, rais of Dataoli; men who are in constant touch with Anglo-Indian officials, and who cannot for a moment bear the idea that Indians should stand on the same footing with Englishmen. These Muhammadan leaders must bear in mind that no amount of detraction and vilification will destroy the rights of the Hindus, and that as soon as the schism between Hindus and Muhammadans is complete internal dissensions between the various sects of Muhammadans will agitate their minds until they exhaust their force and become reduced to insignificance; and then the Anglo-Indian officials will spurn them, and point out to them that they are not one nation and cannot claim any rights until they have co-operation among themselves. The Muhammadan deputation cannot be said to have been a representative body as the Muhammadans, circumstanced as they are, cannot claim to be a nation. He concludes with exhorting the Muhammadans to co-operate with the Hindus, who are sure to give them their due share and to treat them like brethren.

TAFRIH
28th November, 1906.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

121. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 28th November, while deploring the loss of Mr. Badr-ud-din Tyabji, who took a deep interest in the Congress movement, warns Haji Muhammad Ismail, of the mistake he is making in exhorting the Muhammadans to hold themselves aloof from its influence. He points out the good that has resulted to the Hindus by advocating its views, and remarks that the consideration that the Congress is receiving at the hands of Government is a clear indication of the fact that those who malign it as disloyal are in the wrong.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
1st December, 1906.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

122. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st December, says that the conduct of Hindus and Muhammadans is simply natural, and it is a mistake to stigmatize it as unfriendly. The Hindus, who are far ahead of the Muhammadans, feel very naturally disinclined to give up the rights and privileges of their Muhammadan brethren, which they have enjoyed for a considerable length of time, and finding that the Muhammadans are endeavouring to qualify themselves equally well, they are afraid that they will one day wrest what belongs to them by right. The editor considers that this ambition and mutual contest will lead to very good results, and should not be regarded as disunion. He concludes with the hope that a day will come when Hindus and Muhammadans will stand on a common platform and co-operate in promoting the interest of the country.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
4th December, 1906

Hindus and Muhammadans.

123. The Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 4th December, attributes the present degraded condition of the Indians to the split between Hindus and Muhammadans. He exhorts them to co-operate for the regeneration of the country, and points out that mutual recrimination will in no way influence Government against one community or the other.

OUDH AKHBAR,
4th December, 1906.

Hindus and Muhammadans in Eastern Bengal.

124. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 4th December, regrets to find that nothing can overcome the prejudices of the Muhammadans of Eastern Bengal. The editor says that Mr. Muhammad Raza of Delhi and Maulvi Shirazi of Mymensingh are living examples of Muhammadans co-operating with Hindus in promoting swadeshi interests. The assault on Maulvi Shirazi and on the Hindu boys with him, who were going round as swadeshi missionaries, has elicited expressions of deep sympathy from all well meaning Muhammadans of culture and intelligence, and the presiding Magistrate himself advised the parties to become reconciled. Turning to Noakhali, the editor regrets to find that the Assistant Secretary of the local Anjuman-i-Islamia went the length of asking the agent of a certain steamship company to replace his Hindu sub-agent by appointing a Muhammadan and is glad to see that he was baffled in his attempt. He concludes with remarking that Dacca has outdone every other place in spreading disunion between Hindus and Muhammadans; and it is to be feared that no stone has been left unturned there to make the ill-feeling between the two communities as marked as possible. The editor concludes with asking if Muhammadans in Eastern Bengal hope to gain any signal advantages by persisting in these discreditable attempts at disunion.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

OUDH AKHBAR,
5th December,
1906.

125. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 5th December, regrets to find that a man of Maulvi Zakaulla's experience and intelligence should exhort the Muhammadans to hold themselves aloof from the Hindus, as difference of religion renders it impossible that they should ever be on friendly terms. The Maulvi's views are in utter defiance of public opinion and of lessons taught by history, and if his theory be accepted for a moment, what reason can Englishmen have to believe that the Muhammadans are loyal to them, if difference of religion alone is to be looked upon as the cause of disunion. A reference to the History of India under the Ghaznavi, Khilji and the Moghul kings and emperors, shows that the feelings between one brother and another, between father and son, and between other near kinsmen were much more strained than they ever have been between Hindus and Muhammadans, and yet one knows that the princes and rulers who aimed at each other's lives were all Muhammadans, that the two communities then were as friendly as they are at the present day, that they have both been equally loyal to Government for a whole century, and that such of the Hindus and Muhammadans as have any pretensions to sense and intelligence still believe that the well-being of the country does not depend on religious unity, that their very existence and happiness depends on the well-being of the country, that if the theory set up by the Maulvi holds good between Hindus and Muhammadans, it will apply with equal force between Muhammadans and Englishmen, and there seems no reason to believe that the Muhammadans are at all sincere and friendly to their British rulers.

Union between Hindus and Muhammadans.

MOHINI,
30th November,
1906.

126. The Mohini (Kanauj), of the 30th November, after dilating on the good that can result from union between Hindus and Muhammadans, expresses its gratification at learning that attempts are being made to bridge the gulf between the two communities in Bengal, that meetings have been held under the auspices of the Bengal Muhammadan Association, and Nawab Bahadur Saiyid Amir Husain of Calcutta, and that a Muhammadan Vigilance Association has been formed with a view to establish better relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

The property of Muhammadans.

ZUL QARNAIN,
28th November,
1906.

127. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 28th November, says that the ever-increasing poverty of the Muhammadans is due to their ignorance of the means of earning money, excesses, extravagance in living and dressing, litigation in courts, extravagance in marriages, and the like. The editor then refers to the ridiculous behaviour of a Nawab who spent a large sum of money recently in celebrating the marriage of a doll, which formed the subject of comment in certain newspapers; and to the similar conduct of another Nawab in Madras who lavished an immense sum in celebrating the fasts of his daughter's dolls.

Muhammadans in India.

HINDUSTANI,
28th November,
1906.

128. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 28th November, while referring to the Muhammadan deputation that waited recently on His Excellency the Governor of Madras at Madura, says that His Excellency pointed out in his reply to the address that the exigencies of service would not admit of any relaxation of rules in favour of the Muhammadans, and that it was necessary to select the best man available. His Excellency expressed a hope that the Muhammadans will avoid making confessions of their inefficiency in their addresses in future. The editor, while referring to the remarks of the Pioneer on the subject, says that it may as well have borne in mind that the Muhammadans can assert that Government appointments are conferred on Eurasians irrespective of merit and character, and solely on racial grounds.

Muhammadans in India.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
4th December, 1906.

129. The Riyaz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 4th December, says that the Muhammadans of Southern India approached His Excellency the Governor of Madras during his recent visit at Madura and memorialized him to give them a larger share of Government appointments. They received the old stereotyped reply wherein His Excellency pointed out that the enlistment of really capable and deserving men was essential in the interests of British administration, that they should endeavour to qualify themselves before they ask for anything, and that they had a fair field before them and should expect no favour in this respect at the hands of Government. The editor is surprised to find that the Muhammadans though baffled so often do not cease to make persistent requests to be treated with favour.

JASUS,
28th November,
1906.

The Kabulis and the Calcutta police.

130. The Jásus (Agra), of the 28th November, while commenting on the attitude of Government towards the Kabulis who assaulted the Calcutta police very recently, says that similar conduct on the part of an Indian would entail serious consequences not only on himself, but also on his family and neighbours. The editor says that Indians have no self-respect, and it is on this account that they have to submit to indignities of all sorts at the hands of their rulers.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
1st December, 1906.

The Police and the Kabulis in Calcutta.

131. The Kanauj Punch, of the 1st December, while referring to the affray between the Kabulis and the Police at Calcutta, says that Government treats the Kabulis with leniency, because it looks upon them as practically savages.

JASUS,
28th November,
1906.

Treatment accorded by Europeans to Indians and Afghans.

132. The Jásus (Agra), of the 28th November, says that British rule has turned Indians into a nation of cowards, that experience shows that one Englishman will suffice to massacre a whole village of Indians without one of them budging an inch from the place where he stands, as they know that they will be doomed to condign punishment even if they raise a finger at him. The treatment that they are constantly receiving in every sphere of life has crushed their spirit of ambition and manliness, and reduced them to the position of abject slaves. They afford a marked contrast to the trans-frontier Afghan whose self-respect and dignified bearing compel the Englishman to show him every possible courtesy, and to yield to him in case of necessity.

TAFRIH,
28th November,
1906.

Mr. Morley's views on the relation between Anglo-Indians and Indians.

133. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 28th November, says that the views expressed by Mr. Morley on the relations between Anglo- Indians and Indians are only a reiteration of those entertained by Lord Lytton, and embodied in a letter sent by His Lordship to Mr. Morley 32 years back. The editor suggests that there was thus no occasion for the resentment expressed by one of the Indian Civil Servants, as the views expressed by Mr. Morley at a time when Fullerism had reached its zenith, were not unique.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
30th November,
1906.

Englishmen and Indians.

134. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 30th November, is reluctant to accept the assertion that India was won by the sword, and that it will be possible to retain it by sheer force. The Indians have from prehistoric times excelled in the art of war no less than in philosophic research, and it is to be hoped that their latent courage and energies will come into play in case of extreme necessity; though continued suffering and humiliation has made them the most forbearing and passive nation on the earth. As things stand at present they are ever ready to turn their left cheek to their enemies when they smite them on the right. Nature demands that every possible effort should be made by them to surmount the difficulties that are thrown in the way of their freedom and of their other rights and privileges. Englishmen will always find that obedience is ingrained in the nature of Indians, if they try to subdue their hearts by kind treatment instead of making use of the sword.

HINDOSTHAN,
4th December, 1906.

"Native" versus "Feringhi."

135. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 4th December, says that the conduct of the Bengalis is much to be deplored, if they have formed a society to encourage the use of the words Feringhi and Mister in order to retaliate for their being addressed as Natives and Babus, as has been announced by the Hindu of Madras.

TAFRIH,
7th December, 1906.

The Anglo-Indian Press.

136. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 7th December, points out that the Anglo-Indian Press has eventually contrived to bring about a schism in the Native Press by painting the imaginary advantages of the partition of Bengal in glowing colours, and holding out hopes of larger openings in the Government service to Muhammadans. The editor says that differences of opinion exist in every country, but it is much to be regretted that political differences are treated as national and religious questions. The attitude of the Anglo-Indian Press demands the earnest consideration of Government as there is every danger of its causing incalculable harm if allowed to indulge in its rhapsodies without restraint.

The prosecution of the Punjabi and the Tribune.

MUSAFIR,
23rd November,
1906.

137. The Musafir (Agra), of the 23rd November, while referring to the action of Government in instituting proceedings against the Punjabi, and the Tribune, says that the course followed in starting cases against the Native Press, cannot fail to give rise to uncalled for agitation which will be much against the expectations of Anglo-Indian officials and their countrymen.

The prosecution of the Panjabi and the Tribune.

HINDUSTANI,
28th November,
1906.

138. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 28th November, says that the initiation of proceedings against the Punjabi and the Tribune has agitated the public mind in the Punjab, and far from leading to satisfactory results. It is calculated to lead to considerable misunderstanding between the public and Government.

The prosecution of the Panjabi and the Tribune.

OUDH AKHBAR,
3rd December,
1906.

139. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow) of the 3rd December, says that the institution of proceedings against two Lahore papers (the Panjabi and the Tribune) in quick succession leads the public to think that things have come to this pass owing to their patriotic and independent tone. The editor hopes that the course adopted by Government is intended merely to awaken editors and proprietors to a sense of their responsibility, and suggests that should Government be in the right the Tribune should not hesitate to admit its mistake. He concludes with asking his contemporaries to be more careful in the discharge of their duties, and expresses a hope that Government will not take notice of little things, as such a course is beneath its dignity.

The death of the Maharaja of Ajudhya.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th November,
1906.

140. The editor of the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), says in its issue of the 24th November, that the public have no reason to mourn the death of the Maharaja of Ajudhya, whose opposition to Urdu, and sacrilege in connection with a Muhammadan cemetery made him an object of hatred to Muhammadans. He concluded with the remark that though generous and charitable, he was not free from religious prejudices.

The Maharaja of Ajudhya.

AL BASHIR,
4th December, 1906.

141. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 4th December, while expressing its dissent from the Aligarh Institute Gazette in thinking that Hindus and Muhammadans alike have reason to deplore the death of the late Maharaja of Ajudhya says that his opposition to Urdu and the sacrilege of a Muhammadan grave-yard are sure to alienate the sympathies of every Muhammadan from His Highness even after his death.

The Muslim Trading Company, Lahore.

MUFID-I-AM,
24th November,
1906.

142. The Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of the 24th November, attributes the poverty of India to the apathy of Indians towards trade, and formation of co-operative societies. The editor feels highly gratified at learning that the Muslim Trading Company of Lahore is making satisfactory progress, and concludes with an appeal to the Muhammadans in its behalf, wherein he exhorts them to purchase the undisposed of shares of the Company.

Banks under European management.

AL-ISLAM,
30th November,
1906.

143. The editor of Al-Islam (Aligarh), says in its issue of the 30th November, that the failure in quick succession of three banks under European management should suffice to shake the faith of admirers of western ideas and civilization in their infallibility. He refuses to believe that the conduct of the directors and managers of the banks that have collapsed was above-board and that their failure was due to purely professional inexperience and loss in business. He remarks that the Muhammadans have been the chief sufferers by their failure, and concludes by pointing out to them the security of investments in landed property.

The Muhammadan Steam Navigation Company at Chittagong.

AL-ISLAM,
30th November
1906.

144. The editor of Al-Islam (Aligarh), of the 30th November, feels highly gratified at learning that the Muhammadans have formed a Steam Navigation Company at Chittagong with a capital of ten lakhs of rupees, and exhorts them as a community to take to trade instead of hankering after Government appointments.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
1st December, 1906.

The failure of the Arbuthnot Company.

145. The Kanauj Punch, of the 1st December, regrets to notice that the failure of the Arbuthnot Company has involved the Anjunam-i-Islamia, Madras, in ruin, and fears that it will not be possible to realize any money from the Company.

ADVOCATE,
2nd December, 1906.

The Muhammadan Vigilance Society.

146. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 2nd December, makes the following remarks on the Muhammadan Vigilance Society :—We have read with not a little regret the report of the meeting which has led to the formation of a Muhammadan Vigilance Society, as it cannot but lead to racial animosities in Bengal, from the effects of which owing to the mischievous tendency of a section of the vernacular press, the people in Upper India cannot escape. The best course would have been to appoint a committee to enquire into the allegations made by the promoters of the Vigilance Society. Hindus in East Bengal say that a number of Maulvis have been employed who are going round exciting the Muhammadan tenants against the Hindus and creating the belief that the Government desires to crush the Hindus with their help. The charges and the countercharges might be quite untrue, it may be false that any Government official has any hand in these demonstrations, but all the same, complications are being created by this Partition which require all the sagacity and statesmanship of Lord Minto to solve.

TAFRIH,
7th December, 1906.

The Muhammadan Vigilance Committee in Calcutta.

147. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 7th December, while referring to the Muhammadan Vigilance Committee recently formed in Calcutta, says that the alleged ill-feeling between Hindus and Muhammadans is only ephemeral and exists only within the limited circle of a few interested persons, that the relations between the generality of Hindus and Muhammadans are not at all strained, and that the committee cannot be countenanced by persons who have the well-being of the country at heart. The editor remarks that the committee is sure to die a natural death after an evanescent existence.

TAFRIH,
7th December, 1906.

Trade in indigenous products in India.

148. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 7th December, advises Indian capitalists to endeavour to keep the trade in indigenous products in their own hands instead of allowing it to be monopolised by Europeans who already own most of the tea, coffee and indigo plantations in India. The editor points out that the Indians will have to repent their mistake if they do not take time by the forelock.

SAHIFA,
5th and 19th November, 1906.

The influence of Europeans in Deccan.

149. The Sahifa (Bijnor), points out in its combined issue of the 5th and 19th November, received on the 28th November, that the influence of the Europeans in the Deccan is assuming alarming dimensions, and may lead to great complications with which Government will have to contend eventually.

RAHBAR,
28th November, 1906.

The Barisal Conference.

150. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 28th November, after recounting the atrocities perpetrated by the district authorities in dispersing the Barisal conference, and referring to the arrest and subsequent prosecution of Mr. Surendro Nath Banerji, says that the conduct of Mr. Emerson was far more culpable than that of Mr. Kemp, as he was solely responsible for the proper administration of the district. The editor points out that certain interpolations were made in the judgment three days after it had been pronounced, that the Hon'ble High Court noticed this fact in its judgment, and that Mr. Emerson has shown an unpardonable spirit of defiance to standing laws and orders.

RAHBAR,
28th November, 1906.

Babu Surendra Nath Banerji.

151. The Rahbar (Moradabad) of the 28th November, says that much enthusiasm prevailed at the Bombay Railway station on the 17th of November last, when Babu Surendra Nath Banerji was received and greeted with cheers of Bande-Matram by five thousand of the local residents, who unyoked the horses and dragged his carriage to his destination in spite of his remonstrances. Babu Surendra Nath having attended a Congress meeting, delivered a lecture on the swadeshi movement. He explained that Bande-Matram was only a patriotic by-word, exhorted the public generally and the students in particular to interest themselves in the politics of the country, and called upon the audience to renew their vows to promote the swadeshi movement. The editor in conclusion while referring to the conviction of two British soldiers on a charge of theft, points out that the poorest peasant of India is decidedly superior to the British soldier, and regrets to notice that selfishness regulates the conduct of Government in discarding the children of the soil to make room for Englishmen.

The partition of Khandesh.

ARYA MITRA,
1st December, 1906.

152. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 1st December, while referring to the correspondence between Mr. Morley and the Governments of India and Bombay on the subject of the proposed partition of Khandesh, says that feeling runs high in Southern India, and that an agitation similar to that in Bengal is apprehended in the Bombay Presidency.

Strikes in India.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
1st December, 1906.

153. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 1st December, attributes the railway and postal strikes to the preponderance of Hindus in the two departments, and suggests the desirability of an equalization in the strength of Hindus, Muhammadans and Christians in the various departments.

Charity.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
1st December, 1906.

154. The Kanauj Punch, of the 1st December, says that a good deal of charity in India is thrown away on undeserving persons who will not work through sheer laziness. The editor points out that charity in its proper sense should be restricted and bestowed on deserving objects only.

Indians in South Africa.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
1st December 1906.

155 The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 1st December, expresses its regret at finding that Englishmen in South Africa do not allow Indians to go there for purposes of trade, while their countrymen are practically monopolizing the entire trade in India.

Supply of Captain Nesfield's purified water to European soldiers.

HINDOSTHAN,
4th December 1906.

156. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 4th December, suggests that since water preserved in glass bottles is not against the religious prejudices of the Indians, the supply of Captain Nesfield's purified water may be extended to the Native soldiers instead of being restricted to Europeans.

Zadkiel's prophecy.

SAHIFA,
5th December, 1906.

157. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 5th December, reproduces certain prophecies of Mr. Zadkiel and notes amongst them that a religious agitation will overspread India on 10th April next, that a great change is anticipated on 13th October for which Government should be prepared, and that the Amir of Kabul will meet his death during the ensuing year. The editor remarks that Mr. Zadkiel's prophecies are always true, and it will not be strange if these likewise come to be fulfilled.

VI.—RAILWAY.

Theft by a railway guard.

RAHBAR,
28th November, 1906.

158. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 28th November, while referring to the conviction of a railway guard in the Bengal North-Western Railway on a charge of theft by extracting six hundred rupees and a pistol from a trunk in the brakevan, invites the attention of the Railway Board to the increase of crime on running trains, and the lack of public confidence in railway employés, which reflects great discredit on railway administrations.

Misconduct of a railway watchman on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

JASUS,
28th November 1906.

159. A correspondent in the Jásus (Agra), of the 28th November, says that Raj Bahadur, a railway watchman at the Hardoi station on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, abused passengers for remonstrating with him at his conduct in huddling a large number of men into a third class compartment of the Dehra Dun Mail on the 19th of November last. The matter was reported to the station-master who hushed it up on finding that a railway employé was the party charged. The editor points out that the conduct of the watchman was scandalous and extremely discreditable to the administration of the line, and suggests that the Railway authorities and the Railway Board should direct a proper inquiry and give the matter their serious consideration.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM, 30th November, 1906.

The administration of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway line.

160. The Mukhbir-i-Alam (Moradabad), of the 30th November, while deprecating the attitude of the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), in persisting in its unfavourable comments on the administration of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, says that the arrangements on the line are as satisfactory as anything can be, that the railway authorities discharge their duties conscientiously and do all that is conducive to public convenience, and that the virulent attacks of the editor of the Naiyar-i-Azam on the contractors on the line must be due to interested motives.

KANAUJ PUNCH, 1st December, 1906.

Catering arrangements in moving trains.

161. The Kanauj Punch, of the 1st December, while referring to the unsatisfactory nature of the existing catering arrangements on the Railway lines, commends the Southern Mahratta Railway for attaching dining cars to their trains and suggests that similar arrangement should be made on the North-Western Railway.

VII.—POST OFFICE.

ZUL QARNAIN, 28th November, 1906.

Postal stamps on letters.

162. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 28th November, says that the old practice of defacing adhesive stamps affixed to letters should be resorted to as recommended by the Pioneer, since no better means can be devised to check their obliteration that has been going on ever since the new rules have come to be enforced.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 3rd December, 1906.

Increase of pay in the Postal Department.

163. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 3rd December while expressing its appreciation of the increase of pay in the various grades of the Postal Department, suggests that due regard being had to the hard and onerous duties in the department, much still remains to be desired in this direction.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

VAISHYA HITKARI, November, 1906.

Charity.

164. A correspondent in the Vaishya Hitkari (Meerut), for November, regrets to notice that charity in India is misdirected and that lakhs of idle hands consume money that could be employed much better in supporting true religious leaders and helpless persons. Section 173 of Act I of 1900 shows that Government feels the need of taking some measures in this direction. He suggests that the best course would be to establish poor-houses and to limit charities to such persons as are either true religious leaders or are actually helpless.

VAISHYA HITKARI, November, 1906.

Widows in India.

165. The Vaishya Hitkari (Meerut), for November, attributes famine, plague, cholera and other pestilential diseases to the hardships to which Indian widows have to submit. The editor says that the chief causes of widowhood are early marriage, and the marriage of young girls with old husbands. He exhorts the leaders of the country to take all possible steps to check such unequal matches, and to move the Government to help them by means of legislation if necessary. He thinks that Government will be only too willing to render every possible assistance in the matter.

ANAND, 4th December, 1906.

Holidays in Government treasuries.

166. The Anand (Lucknow), of 4th December, invites the attention of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of these provinces to the fact that the non-observance of the Somvati Amawas and eclipse holidays in Government treasuries is calculated to cause considerable inconvenience to the Hindus employed in treasuries and banks.

I.—Politics.

(a).—Foreign.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th December, 1906.

Persia.

1. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 5th December, while approving of the views of a Calcutta contemporary, that Persia should not be guided by the counsels of any foreign powers except the Sultan, who is united to her by the bond of Islam, says that a Muhammadan power will on no account try to bring ruin on a ruler professing Islam, and that experience shows that European powers have invariably tried to gain their own ends, wherever they have gained a footing regardless of the consequence of their action to the country to which they have gone.

HINDOSTHAN,
11th December 1906.

Parliament in Persia.

2. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 11th December, while expressing its gratification at the new form of Government introduced in Persia, says that Asiatic powers are beginning to realize the usefulness of democratic institutions, and concludes with the hope that the example set by Persia will be followed by Turkey, Afghanistan and other countries in the East at no distant date.

MUSAFIR,
30th November and 8th December, 1906.

The deposition of the Raja of Annam.

3. The Musáfir (Agra) says, in its combined issue of the 30th November and 8th December, that the European powers may fitly be called the king-makers of the East, as they depose or suspend eastern potentates at their pleasure. Matters in Annam are becoming very complicated at present, and it is to be feared that France means to altogether appropriate the principality, while for years past the Raja has exercised no practical authority beyond the four walls of his palace. The editor remarks that the deposition of Than Thai will be very painful to those living in the East, as this means the extinction of an old and independent kingdom. He concludes with expressing his deep regret at finding that things are going from bad to worse in the East.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
8th December, 1906.

The Indian colonists in Transvaal.

4. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 8th December, while pointing out that the brilliant success of Japan has won for her a prominent position amongst the civilized nations of the world, says that other Asiatics in Transvaal have to submit to all sorts of indignities, and suggests that steps should be taken to assure their better treatment.

(b).—Home.

UNION GAZETTE,
7th December, 1906.

Political relation between England and Afghanistan.

5. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 7th December, says that the policy which underlies the intercourse between the Afghans and the Englishmen and defines their relations is very intricate and difficult to understand. Each tries to outdo the other in diplomatic strategy, and one cannot for some time yet expect to arrive at a solution of the riddle. As things stand the situation is becoming more and more complicated every day, and neither wishes to be a whit behind the other in making advances of friendship. Adverting to the forthcoming visit of the Amir the editor says that the Viceroy is bound to give him a most hearty welcome, as Afghanistan is the bulwark of India.

AL-AZIZ,
November, 1906.

The Indian National Congress.

6. Al-Aziz (Agra), for November, recommends moderation in the Congress camp, as the views of the Extremists are calculated to undo the good brought about by Mr. Gokhale's exertions in England. The editor concludes with pointing out that India is passing through a political crisis, and that it is therefore highly desirable that the speeches and actions of the leaders of the country should be characterized by careful thought and prudence.

AL-AZIZ,
November, 1906

The Indian National Congress.

7. A correspondent in Al-Aziz (Agra), for November, while regretting the degeneration of the Muhammadans, points out the desirability of their co-operating with the Hindus in promoting the cause of the National Congress, and exhorts them to make union and progress their guiding principles, as inculcated in the teachings of the Prophet. He points out that community of dress and language is only an idle dream, and advises them to have recourse to racial institutions only if co-operation with Hindus is impossible.

ZIYA-UL-ISLAM,
December, 1906.

The Indian National Congress.

8. The Ziyá-ul-Islám (Moradabad), for December, says that certain leading congressmen are infusing a new spirit in the Indian National Congress, and are endeavouring to suppress the social and political rights of the Muhammadans. The younger generation of Muhammadans are no doubt right in thinking that, being in a minority and far less educated, they will have great difficulties in securing a due share of their rights, if they co-operate with the Hindus. They do not besides approve of the methods adopted by the Hindus for demanding their rights from Government. It is, however, highly desirable that the two communities should co-operate in all matters in which they can profit equally by their co-operation. The editor regrets to notice that the Arya and the Congress organs alike have taken up a hostile attitude towards the Muhammadan deputation, and points out that the various sects of Muhammadans should merge all racial differences and combine themselves into one nation, before they think of a union with the Hindus.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
4th December, 1906.

The Indian National Congress.

9. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 4th December, while referring to the rejoicings of certain Congress papers over the offer of tents by the Government of India for the accommodation of Congress delegates, remarks that no such offer has been made, that all that has been done is that Government has agreed to give a plot of ground for pitching tents for the delegates, and has promised its aid to the exhibition. The editor says that no one with any sense of patriotism can be opposed to the exhibition, and that, as he has pointed out repeatedly, had the time, money and energy spent on the Congress been directed to some other useful pursuit, much good would have been done to the country by this time.

RAHBAR,
7th December, 1906.

The Indian National Congress.

10. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th December, while rejoicing at the interest that the London Times has evinced in a series of articles appearing in its editorial columns, says that the credit of awakening the English Press to the importance of the Congress movement is due to Babu Bipin Chandar Pal and other extremists, notably Mr. Tilak and Lala Lajpat Rai. The editor then points out that no endeavours have so far been made to educate the masses in politics, and suggests that political tracts should be freely distributed, and that political missionaries should be sent out to deliver lectures throughout the country. He considers therefore that the formation of provincial and district political associations is highly desirable, recommends moderation, and concludes with pointing out that the swadeshi movement will unite the masses just the same as the Congress has united the educated classes.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
8th December, 1906.

The Indian National Congress and the Muhammadans.

11. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 8th December, says that Muhammadan leaders are spending their entire force in opposing the Hindus and the Congress instead of doing anything to benefit their community, that their conduct is sure to lead the Government to infer that the rights asked for by the Congress should go to the Hindus alone, though the latter do not say so in plain words, and treat Muhammadans as their brethren. The editor asks Muhammadans how they can in the face of their opposition have the moral courage to ask for a share in what Congressmen have secured from Government. He exhorts the Muhammadan public to have no faith in their so-called leaders, as all that they care for is their personal fame and aggrandizement, which when accomplished, they are sure to sever their connection with the community, leaving it where it was. He points out that the Congress has worked for them just the same as it has for the Hindus, and that if they cannot profit by it, it is their own fault. The Muhammadans have a very limited number of National schools and colleges which are not at all suited for the poor, who form the bulk of their community. He concludes with exhorting them to leave aside all useless differences, and to work side by side with the Hindus in promoting the social, moral and political interests of the Indian nation as a whole.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
8th December, 1906.

The Indian National Congress.

12. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th December, says that the fact of the proceedings of the Congress meeting held recently at Bombay which was attended by delegates from the various provinces of India having been kept confidential shows that the Hindus are afraid of the Muhammadans, and that the proceedings in question are not calculated to benefit the latter.

BHARAT JIWAN, 10th December, 1906.

The Indian National Congress.

13. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 10th December, says that the Indian National Congress has so far done nothing beyond affording leading Indians an opportunity for meeting once a year, and suggests the desirability of starting three separate associations with a view to train public opinion and prepare zamindars, merchants and cultivators on the lines suggested by the Amrita Bazar Patrika, so as to prepare them to join the deliberations of the Congress, which they are at present afraid to do, lest their conduct should be against the wishes of the district authorities. The editor concludes with the hope that the Congress will be able to do something practical during its next sessions, so as to justify the enormous expenditure incurred annually.

HINDOSTHAN, 14th December, 1906.

The Indian National Congress.

14. A correspondent in the Hindi Hindosthán (Kalakaukar), of the 14th December says, that the meeting held at Mymensing for electing delegates for the Indian National Congress has sent a letter to Babu Surendra Nath Banerji informing him that a large number of delegates will like to have swadeshi chairs and benches for their use in the pandal. He suggests that should the arrangement suggested be found to be impracticable carpets of country manufacture may be resorted to for accommodating the delegates in which case a cushion for Mr. Naoroji will be necessary; he concludes with asking how those dressed in English style will be accommodated if delegates sit on carpets spread over the floor.

AL-AZIZ, November, 1906.

The Extremists in Indian politics.

15. The editor of Al-Aziz (Agra), for November, says that the views of the Extremists are very injurious to the cause of the country, and points out that the Moderates should take early steps to impress Government with the idea that the Indian public disclaims them as their representatives.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 13th December, 1906.

The Extremists in the Congress.

16. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 13th December, contains the following note about the Extremists in the Indian National Congress:—Among the many speakers who spoke at the breakfast given to Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji not one spoke in condemnation or depreciation of the "Extremist" party. Mr. Hume and Mr. Dadabhai himself spoke words of sympathy, and the view that they take is the only reasonable view of the situation. In the first place, it is hardly right to say that the Extremists are a new party. Mr. Tilak is one of the recognised leaders of this party and he is not certainly a new man. What has really happened is this: all over the country there has been rising a school of political thought which has gradually detached itself from the older methods of thinking. The partition of Bengal and the swadeshi movement have brought to a focus the hitherto desultory thinking on the subject of self-reliant political propaganda. . . . . . In this connection it is impossible to overlook Bande Mataram, the happily named organ of the new party. In power of expression it is second to no Indian paper, while it has an admirable and firm grasp of the many ticklish questions with which it deals. That is a very great advantage to begin with. It is a great thing to know your own mind and to be able to express it with unmistakable clearness and firmness. The policy of Bande Mataram, is the policy of self-reliance, and it is bound to be the future policy of the country. As we gradually grow out of leading-strings we must learn to stand on our own feet. The future therefore lies with the party that is called Extremist to-day, but whose following is bound to increase with the passing of time.

INDIAN PEOPLE, 13th December, 1906.

The Imperialists in the Congress.

17. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 13th December, says that Mr. Manikji Kavasji Patel, who calls himself a Parsi Congressman, has issued a circular letter for publication, in which he declares that the Congress is now divided into three well-defined sections—the Imperialists, the Moderates and the Extremists. We have all heard of the latter two, but the first is a new discovery. Curiosity about this new party is easily satisfied by a glance at Mr. Patel's very frank letter. He writes:—"Imperialist section led by Sir Pherozshah Mehta is content with making petitions to Government for rights and privileges, and with continuing to adopt what is called the Mendicant Policy. . . . It is intolerable to see certain gentlemen in Bombay masquerading as what are called the Moderates. They are Imperialists in the guise of Moderates, whose High Priest is Sir Pherozshah Mehta. He alone is responsible for the unpatriotic actions of this Imperialist party, as no one is prepared to recognise as responsible agents his political friends and supporters. Unfortunately for India the Government have been able to tear away from the Congress cause, sometimes by titles, sometimes by high posts and offices, sometimes by one influence and sometimes by another, able men who might have served their country zealously and usefully. In the opinion of many, Sir Pherozshah and his supporters have proved themselves a body of politicians little influenced by principle or animated by a patriotic spirit." The insinuation doubtless is that Sir Pherozshah Mehta has been torn away from the Congress by a title. The writer is more generous to Mr. Surendra Nath Banerjee, whom he calls the greatest Indian patriot, next to the Grand Old Man of India. Without in any way detracting from the tribute of praise justly paid to the Bengali patriot, may we be permitted to protest against the attempt to run down the Bombay patriot, on the ground that swadeshism is not the faith of his school? Sir Pherozshah Mehta is not lightly to be lowered in the estimation of his countrymen after his brilliant record of public service. What he has done and is still doing for the city of Bombay must be known to Mr. Patel. What he has done in the sphere of national politics is writ large in the history of public life during the last thirty years.

AGRA MAGAZINE,
December, 1906.

The National Flag of India.

18. The Agra Magazine for December, contains the following extract from the Gaelic American of the 27th October last. The editor thinks that the language used is somewhat harsh :—

" The cry of Bande Mataram (Hail Motherland !) has gone forth over the land and has become the watchword of the new life. British Tory tyranny and British Liberal hypocrisy have between them created for the Indian people a cause; and the Indian people have for themselves devised a symbol worthy of their cause. This symbol is the National Flag. It is a banner of three broad horizontal bands, the uppermost green, the sacred colour of the Moslems, with a line of eight stars emblematic of the eight provinces of India; the centre band golden hue, the colour of the Sikhs and Buddhists, with the words Bande Mataram, in Sanskrit, the ancient language of India; and the lower the red of the Hindus with a radiant orb near the staff and the Muhammadan crescent near the outer edge. The combination typifies the union of the creeds and races of India as a nation, one and indivisible, and is the beginning of the end of the foreign and now intolerable despotism of Great Britain that has reduced a country that once abounded in wealth to a condition of appalling poverty, misery and degradation yet has the colossal effrontery to call itself a civilizing power."

MOHNI,
11th December, 1906.

Muhammadan politics.

19. The editor of the Mohni (Kanauj), expresses his inability in its issue of the 11th December, to understand what good can result to the Muhammadans by having a separate political institution of their own, as was advocated by a correspondent in the Tribune (Lahore), who thinks that they could not do better than hold their first meeting at Aligarh.

AL-AZIZ,
November, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

20. Al-Aziz (Agra), for November, while pointing out that the Muhammadan deputation, which recently waited on the Viceroy, is opposed to the principles of representation and competition, remarks that the younger generation of Muhammadans resent the idea of admitting their intellectual inferiority to the other races inhabiting India.

AL-AZIZ,
November, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

21. The editor of Al-Aziz (Agra), for November, says that the Muhammadans should be prepared to spend large sums of money annually both in England and India, in order to make the Muhammadan deputation a success to any appreciable extent, and concludes with the remark that they will do much better to make common cause with the Indian National Congress, which has for sometime past made a large annual outlay.

AKHBAR-I-IMAMIA,
20th November, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

22. The Akhbár-i-Imamia (Lucknow,) of the 20th November, says that the conduct of the Muhammadan deputation in neglecting the Shia community and excluding it from their debates at Lucknow shows an utter want of confidence on the part of Sunnis, and leads one to infer that the omission was an intentional insult and not a matter of pure chance. The editor points out that Nawab Nasir Husain Khan, though a Shia, joined the deputation owing to his personal friendship with Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk, and was actuated by selfish motives of making a name into duping his Shia brethren. He considers his conduct in obtaining the signatures of certain Shia Muhammadans, without giving them an insight into the contents of the document that they were signing, was very discreditable. He remarks that the editors and proprietors of Shia newspapers are the true representatives of their community, and a consultation with them was imperatively necessary for any body purporting to represent the interests of the entire Muhammadan community. The Nawab owes an explanation for his conduct towards his Shia brethren, if he wishes to maintain his reputation for integrity and respectability. Adverting to Lord Minto's reply he points out that His Excellency said nothing with reference to most of the suggestions and requests made in the address, in spite of the threat that was held out by pointing out that "recent events have stirred up feelings, specially among the younger generation of Muhammadans, which might in certain circumstances and under certain contingencies easily pass beyond the control of temperate counsel and sober guidance." He disapproves of the suggestion made by certain Sunnis, that to begin with the Muhammadans should merge all sectarian differences and make common cause against the Hindus, and settle their private differences after they have achieved success against their common enemy, as such a course will be calculated to defer the claims of the Shias for a whole century, and points out the desirability of the Shias settling their differences with the Sunnis at the very outset.

UNION GAZETTE,
7th December, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

23. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 7th December, says that attempts to detract from the representative character of the deputation, because the Shia community was represented somewhat meagrely, are due to interested motives. The very fact that His Highness Sir Agha Khan led the deputation and that it was backed by Nawab Salim-ulla Khan of Dacca should in itself suffice to set all sectarian differences at rest. There can at the same time be no doubt as to its importance; and the opinions of a few detractors who think it has failed to produce the desired effect, should be looked upon as deserving of no weight and consideration. The editor exhorts the Muhammadans to co-operate not only with their own Muhammadan brethren, but also with the Hindus in promoting the swadeshi movement and in encouraging indigenous arts and manufactures.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
8th December, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

24. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th December, says that the condemnation of the Muhammadan deputation by His Highness Nawab Akhtar Khan, who does not regard it as a representative body is not entitled to any weight or consideration, because the opinion expressed by His Highness is not only personal, but also the opinion of a man of many interests, who as such cannot be expected to concern himself sufficiently in national matters.

SAHIFA,
12th December, 1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

25. The Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 12th December, feels highly gratified that the attempts of the opponents of the Muhammadan deputation to create ill-feeling between Shias and Sunnis and to detract from its merits and importance have ended in failure.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th December, 1906.

Camps of exercise in India.

26. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 5th December, while referring to the immense loss done to the crops during the camps of exercise in various places, suggests the desirability of Government bestowing their attention to the matter, as it is otherwise calculated to lead to considerable public dissatisfaction.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
6th December, 1906.

Cavalry camps.

27. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 6th December, says that in the winter months cavalry is moved out of lines for exercise. Besides the large camps of exercise that are formed, every regiment and squadron goes into camp at some distance from headquarters.

* * * * * * *

It will not strike any one as an original truth that India is an agricultural country. Every inch of ground on which anything can be grown is cultivated. Besides the parade grounds attached to cavalry and artillery lines, there are no maidans available for exercise. As soon as men and horses stray from the roadside they trespass upon cultivated land, which is just now green with the rabi crops. The cavalry horses trample these under foot and the poor villagers dare not remonstrate, for their reward would be a smart physical chastisement. The grass everywhere is collected by the cavalry grass-cutters by force. The sowars sometimes go out shooting and the trembling villagers have to render them such service as is demanded of them. The sowars, however, are not to blame at all. It is for the military authorities to apply to the Government for reserve land on which military operations and camps should be held. The Government owns large Reserve Forests. Why does it not set apart land for cavalry and infantry exercise and military training? In a country in which famines are becoming the rule and good years the exception is it morally defensible to allow standing crops to be wantonly destroyed in this manner?

ADVOCATE,
6th December,
1906.

Sir Antony MacDonnell.

28. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 6th December, says that a Sunday paper, which sometimes gets early information mentions a rumour that Sir Antony MacDnonell may be offered an appointment in India.

RAHBAR,
7th December,
1906.

Extension of the Viceroy's Legislative Council.

29. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th December, suggests that the additional Indian member, in the Viceroy's Legislative Council should be a man of unquestionable merit and integrity like Mr. Gokhale, if the extension of the council is intended to be of any real good to the country.

HINDOSTHAN,
12th December,
1906.

Pro-consulship at Allahabad.

30. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 12th December, says that now that a change is again impending in the Pro-consulship at Allahabad, the old rumours are about once more in all their activity as a matter of course. Gossip in this case appears to be grounding itself on the supposed personal preference of Mr. Hewett for Lucknow. It is curious that even in a country, where public opinion is so largely the opinion of the services, few will allow themselves to credit the rulers with an ordinary degree of detachment and disinterestedness. A man who would not swerve a hair's breadth for private considerations in fixing the site of a staging bungalow or thana, will gravely suspect his Lieutenant-Governor of a design to abandon one capital and build another, for no other reason than a frivolous personal prejudice on the subject of some particular climate, house or garden.

Fortunately one need not look far to see that these are not the lines on which our Governors always act. Lord Ripon, it is pretty well known, detested Simla personally: but he it was that anchored the Government of India to the place by the construction of the public offices and a permanent viceregal residence. Sir James LaTouche has shown more liking for Allahabad in his private capacity than almost any of his predecessors: but it was under his auspices that the Government of the Province embarked on the daring scheme for transferring itself, High Court and all, to a new Zion on the far side of the Goomti. What Mr. Hewett's private views may be no one can have any title to say; but we are quite certain that his attitude to the question will not be arrived at by weighing the attractions of the Lucknow race-course, against those of the services at the Allahabad Cathedral, or any such process. It seems much more probable, considering the character that he has displayed in his administration of the Commercial Department, that Mr. Hewett will show himself keenly alive to the injury which is done to both cities by this chronic state of uncertainty, acting as an extinguisher on every scheme of development, and will exert himself to get an end put to it once for all.

TAFRIH,
14th December,
1906.

The Civil Service examinations in India.

31. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 14th December, regrets to find that Haji Muhammad Ismail has set himself up in opposition to the views expressed by a European gentleman in favour of simultaneous Civil Service examinations in India and England. The chief argument advanced by the Haji is that the Civil Service will become flooded with Indians most of whom will be Bengalis who are far ahead of other nations in point of education.

SITARA-I-HIND,
28th November,
1906.

The visit of the Amir of Kabul to Dehli.

32. The Sitára-i-Hind (Moradabad', of the 28th November, while referring to the rise of the prices of articles of food in Dehli, owing to the forthcoming visit of the Amir of Kabul, suggests that the local authorities there should import provisions from different parts of the country so as to avoid things being sold at famine prices. The editor points out that the Bengal Press had occasion for much unfavourable comment for similar reasons during the Coronation Durbar at Dehli.

SITARA-I-HIND,
28th November,
1906.

The visit of the Amir of Kabul to India.

33. The Sitára-i-Hind (Moradabad), of the 28th November, says that the Amir of Kabul has outdone Englishmen by taking an advance of twenty lakhs of rupees to meet the expenses of his forthcoming visit to India, and there is not the least doubt now that he will not spend anything out of his own pocket. It was a well-known fact that he would receive presents worth several lakhs on coming to India but that would give no occasion for comment. His present conduct however is like that of a guest who on receiving certain presents from his host, asked him what he proposed to bring with him on returning his visit.

ARYA MITRA,
8th December,

The Agra Durbar.

34. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th December, sees no reason why ladies should be excluded from the Agra durbar and considers that the excuse of insufficiency of accommodation is untenable.

III.—Native States.

ADVOCATE,
6th December, 1906.

State embezzlement at Bharatpur.

35. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 6th December says that in these days a sensational case of fraud to the amount of thirty thousand rupees is being enquired into by the Sessions Judge at Bharatpur. It is said that one Divan Champa Lal had managed to forge certain orders, passed by the late Maharaja, and some old files showing him as entitled to a very large sum of money. Dame rumour says that several responsible officers, some of whom hold a very high position in the State, were concerned in the conspiracy. Divan Champa Lal was lately arrested at Gwalior, and is now being tried by the Sessions Judge of Bharatpur State together with his confederates. The rumour is in the air, as often happens in the world, that the chief offender is still at large and untouched, owing to the high position he holds in the State. It is said that the old official records lying in the most guarded rooms of the Record Department have been secretly ransacked by breaking open the locks with a view to removing all traces of evidence against the real offenders, while a few petty officials are being sacrificed. It is to be hoped that the higher authorities will make a sifting enquiry into the matter to redress the grievances of the oppressed.

EXPRESS,
6th December,
1906.

Death of Maulvi Abdul Ghafur, late Minister of Rampur.

36. The Express (Lucknow), of the 6th December, says that news has reached India through the British official of Egypt, of the death of Maulvi Abdul Ghafur, late Minister of Rampur. The Collector of Meerut has informed the heirs of the death which it is believed, has been due to suicide, though the latter portion of the information has not been confirmed.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
8th November, 1906.

Rampur.

37. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 8th November, calls attention to the murderous assault on the old father of a girl, who had her nose slit recently, and to the nose-cutting of a European lady at Rampur, and remarks that a passenger was robbed and brutally assaulted on the night of the 21st November last close to the railway station.

1906.

Muhammadan Judges in Indian High Courts.

38. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 28th November, while suggesting the appointment of Mr. Sharfuddin, of Behar, to the ensuing vacancy in the Calcutta High Court, advocates the appointment of one Hindu and one Muhammadan Judge in every one of the Indian High Courts, and remarks that equalization in the numerical strength of Hindus and Muhammadans in government service will set at rest all disputes between the two communities.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
13th December,
1906.

A Muhammadan Judge.

39. The Indian People (Allahabad), makes the following remarks in its issue of the 13th December :—We congratulate the Hon. Mian Muhammad Shah Din, barrister-at-law, upon his appointment as an officiating Judge of the Punjab Chief Court. At the same time, we should like to point out that the coincidence between this appointment and the recommendation addressed to the Viceroy by Maulvi Mehdi Ali, is purely accidental, nor is there any attempt to cut out the claims of Mr. Justice Lalchand, as suggested in that letter.

* * * * * * * *

The first permanent vacancy in the Punjab Chief Court, for which an Indian may be eligible, will now go to Lala Lalchand, and Mr. Shah Din's claim will come next. This is an arrangement which will be viewed with satisfaction. The Punjab Chief Court will now have three Indian Judges for a time—a Bengali, a Punjabi Hindu and a Punjabi Muhammadan, whereas at Allahabad the idea of two Indian Judges in the High Court is still officially rejected as impracticable.

MUSAFIR,
30th November, and 8th December,
1906.

Death by a motor accident.

40. The Musafir (Agra) says in its combined issue of the 30th November, and the 8th December, that one Mr. Barton was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment for causing the death of a poor respectable Bengali by driving his motor car furiously. The Crown was unrepresented on the case being taken up in appeal, and the accused was in consequence acquitted. The editor says that policy of this sort is looked upon with disgust, and tends to lower Government considerably in public estimation.

ARYA MITRA,
8th December, 1906.

Criminal breach of trust in Bombay.

41. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th December, while referring to the arrest of three Europeans on a charge of embezzling one lakh of rupees belonging to a tramway company in Bombay considers such conduct inexcusable in Europeans as they have not to submit to privations like Indians.

SANSAR MITRA,
11th December,
1906.

Hindi summonses and other processes.

42. The Sansár Mitra (Allahabad), of the 11th December, points out that a very large number of summonses and other processes are issued without the necessary entries being made on the Hindi portion of the document, which is against standing Government orders and causes great inconvenience to people residing in villages. The editor, while regretting the want of support from the present Government in enforcing the orders of Sir Antony MacDonnell in this respect, expresses a hope that steps will be taken to see that the orders which are calculated to do public good are not treated as a dead letter.

EXPRESS,
6th December,
1906.

Opium cultivation in India.

43. The Express (Lucknow), of the 6th December, while referring to Mr. Morley's important statement concerning the contemplated decrease in the area of opium cultivation, says that the opium revenue is a valuable asset to the Government, and in the event of its decline, the Indian revenues will hardly leave any margin for affording relief to the ryots.

Roads in Etawah.

45. The Brahmán Sarvaswa (Etawah) for October, complains of the bad condition of such of the roads in Etawah as are not frequented by Europeans, and points out that their repairs should always be attended to properly as they are maintained at public cost. The editor suggests that roads with heavy traffic should be repaired more frequently than they are at present.

SITARA-I-HIND,
28th November,
1906.

Public and private latrines in Moradabad.

46. The Sitara-i-Hind (Moradabad), of the 28th November, while pointing out that certain private latrines in Asalatpur have been allowed to remain as they were, though certain others have been ordered to be made of brick and mortar, asks for a thorough enquiry into the matter, which will no doubt lead to the discovery of some ulterior motive on the part of the Municipal Secretary and Superintendent, who did not show the mud latrines in certain houses that have been allowed to stand as they were to the Collector when he visited the locality. The editor says that the Superintendent is unduly severe and at times does things calculated to wound public feeling. The recent orders closing private latrines in certain quarters and directing that women, children and old men should all go out of their houses to a public latrine at some distance from inhabited sites for purposes of answering the calls of nature has been a source of much public dissatisfaction. He concludes with pointing out that the Secretary is actuated by personal motives in oppressing the residents of Asalatpur, and invites the attention of the district authorities to the iniquity of his orders whereby people in one quarters have been directed to build pucca latrines, while those in another have been directed to go out to public latrines for answering calls of nature.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
3rd December,
1906.

Octroi duties.

47. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 3rd December, regrets to notice that things brought by passengers for exclusively personal use are subjected to octroi duties. The editor says that such a thing was never contemplated when municipal boards first came into existence. He points out that far from contributing to public convenience, the municipal boards are becoming converted into a machinery for extortion engineered by the District Magistrate independently of the voice of the native members who have no alternative but to carry out his behests. He suggests that the example set by the Commissioner of Rawalpindi in exempting things brought in for personal use from octroi duty should be followed in these provinces; and deplores to find that the majority of members in municipal boards are quite unmindful of their public duties. While pointing out the extreme unwillingness of the official element to have men of independent views on the board he refers to the unpopularity of the Agra municipal board, condemns the resolution making temples and mosques liable to water rate, and expresses a hope that the Local Government will take steps to see that they continue to enjoy immunity from taxation as they have done heretofore.

ADVOCATE,
9th December,
1906.

The Ghazipur Municipality.

48. A correspondent from Ghazipur makes the following complaints regarding the Ghazipur municipality in the Advocate of the 9th December :—The Ghazipur municipality, bad as it was, is becoming worse every day. One quarter of the city had a few cases of plague and the people vacated the quarter altogether. This ought to have aroused the municipal members from their deep slumber. The western portion of the city is as dirty as possible, especially Muhalla Neazi, and quarters adjoining it. The drains overflow and the streets are filled with filthy water, which produces digusting stench. A dead cat or a dead dog may remain lying for three or four days in a public street, but it will not be removed unless some person living near the place gets it removed at his own cost. The drains crossing the streets are some only partly, and some not at all covered over with stones, so that ekkas and carriages which could pass by that way, since the streets are wide enough, have to take a longer route in order to avoid these particular streets. It is also very dangerous for people walking in the dark.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
11th December,
1906.

The Agra Municipality.

49. A correspondent in the Nasim-i-Agra of the 11th December, says that the promptitude of the Agra municipality in collecting taxes contrasts remarkably with their dilatory habits in attending to public requirements, and concludes with pointing out that such delays would entail nothing short of dismissal if the responsibility lay with a native, and applications for water supply remained unattended to for months.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
11th December, 1906.

The Agra Municipal Board.

50. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 11th December, condemns the recent resolution of the Municipal Board directing payment of certain taxes on account of temporary scaffolding erected for building houses, which has led to much public dissatisfaction. The editor says that the public have a right of easement over the ground in front of their houses, that the municipality are not justified in encroaching on such rights, and concludes with expressing his surprise at the utter disregard to public convenience on the part of those who voted in favour of the resolution.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR,
11th December, 1906.

The Municipal administration in Benares.

51. The Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares), of the 11th December, invites the attention of the chairman to the slackness of the local municipal board which leads to considerable public loss and incovenience, and refers to the case of an old woman whose application in connection with certain house property was disposed of after the lapse of a little over eleven months ; though the municipality is only too ready to take legal steps against any of the public if there is the slightest delay on their part in the payment of taxes or in complying with its orders.

HINDOSTHAN,
14th December, 1906.

Footpaths alongside roads.

52. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 14th December, while referring to the accident of a girl run over by an ekka on the road in front of the Canning College in Lucknow, approves of the suggestion of a correspondent in the Indian Daily Telegraph suggesting the desirability of having footpaths on both sides of roads in all large cities with a view to prevent similar occurrences.

(e).—Education.

AL-AZIZ,
November, 1906.

The Muhammadan Educational Conference.

53. A correspondent in Al-Aziz (Agra), for November, regrets to find that the Muhammadan Educational Conference takes no practical steps, though it affirms its resolutions year after year, and considers its apathy to public endowments as highly reprehensible.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
28th November, 1906.

The All-India Muhammadan Educational Conference.

54. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 28th November, exhorts the Muhammadan public to muster strong at the forthcoming All-India Muhammadan Educational Conference, so as to help their brethren in Eastern Bengal with their advice in matters of education, and points out the desirability of their following the example of Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk, His Highness Sir Agha Khan, and the Nawab of Dacca in promoting national interests.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
28th November, 1906.

Boarding arrangements at the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

55. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 28th November, says that of the various complaints about the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, that relating to boarding arrangements deserves the attention of the College Committee first and foremost. The editor remarks that there is no doubt that the complaint is well founded, and says that his own correspondent has given the matter much greater prominence than any other complaints. He concludes with the remark that those in charge of the boarding arrangements are chiefly to blame and hopes that early steps will be taken to remedy the existing evils which, if not attended to, are sure to endanger the health of students.

MUSAFIR,
30th December, 1906.

The proposed appointment of a German Arabic Professor in the Aligarh College.

56. The Musáfir (Agra) says, in its combined issue of the 30th November and the 8th December, that a European Professor can by no means do justice to Arabic to the same extent as a good Muhammadan Arabic scholar, whose services can be secured on a salary of Rs. 200 or Rs. 300 per mensem. The editor therefore fails to understand the policy of Government in proposing the appointment of a German Arabic Professor in the Aligarh College, on a salary of Rs. 750 rising to Rs. 1,000 per mensem. While referring to the strong protest made by the Hindus of Bengal against the proposal to appoint a European Sanskrit Professor in the Presidency College, Calcutta, on the ground that it was an insult to the entire Hindu community, he is anxious to know whether the loyalty of Muhammadans will override their sense of national pride and lead them to submit tamely to this national humiliation.

Female education.

MUFID-I-AM,
8th December, 1906.

57. The Mufid-i-Ám (Agra), of the 8th December, says that female education is extremely necessary, inasmuch as children receive their first lessons from their mothers, who must receive at least a good religious training so as to be able to produce a wholesome influence on their progeny.

Female education.

MUFID-I-AM,
1st December, 1906.

58. A correspondent in the Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of the 1st December, points out that far from corrupting morals, female education will prove to be of immense value, in educating posterity, besides alleviating the sorrows of womanhood, and teaching them to share the cares and troubles of their husbands in times of adversity.

Urdu and Hindi.

MUFID-I-AM,
1st December, 1906.

59. The Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of the 1st December, while pointing out that the Local Government has refused to consider that the publication of a Hindi edition of the Government Gazette, or of Hindi translations of Government orders and circulars is necessary for public information, suggests that Government has thereby admitted the claims of Urdu as the recognized vernacular of the United Provinces. The editor exhorts the Hindus to co-operate with the Muhammadans in advocating the cause of Urdu, and to lay aside all racial prejudices which may eventually prove fatal to the interests of Urdu and Hindi alike.

The new Syndicate of the Punjab University.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th December,
1906.

60. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 5th December, points out that there is only one Muhammadan to four Hindus and twelve Europeans in the syndicate of the Punjab University, and questions the justice of those responsible for this disproportion. when capable Muhammadans are not wanting in the province.

The Jubilee High School.

HINDUSTAN,
5th December,
1906.

61. The Hindustáni (Lucknow), of the 5th December, expresses its gratification at learning that the Local Government has acceded to certain proposals made with a view to raise the standard of education in the Local Jubilee High School, and hopes that an increase in the salaries of the staff and an interchange of teachers between this and the zila schools will prove highly beneficial.

The three new Inspectorships in the Educational Department.

ADVOCATE,
6th December,
1906.

62. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 6th December, while referring to the three new Inspectorships in the Educational Department, says that it would be much better if the whole of the Educational Department unites and makes common cause against outsiders, and if all the senior provincial servants represent their case through their new D. P. I., who has been popular throughout and, who will, it is hoped, take up and defend the cause of his subordinates. There should be no question of caste or creed, and Hindus, Muhammadans, Christians, Europeans, Eurasians and Indians serving in the Department should unite together against their common enemy.

The new Inspectorships in the Department of Education.

ROHILKHAND
GAZETTE,
8th December, 1906.

63. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th December, while feeling highly gratified at the consideration Government has given to the claims of Muhammadans in connection with the new Inspectorships created in the provincial department of education, says that the remarks of certain Congress organs that Muhammadans have a distaste for service in the department, is misleading. The editor points out that the Hindus are practically monopolizing the department, and suggests the names of certain Muhammadans who will do remarkably well if appointed to fill the posts under consideration.

National education.

RAHBAR,
7th December,
1906.

64. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th December, while regretting that the masses have not the means to educate their children, on whom the future of India depends, suggests that a fund should be raised, with a view to educate intelligent and promising boys whose parents cannot afford to spend money on them. The editor suggests that if necessary such boys may be called upon to assist the national fund when they enter the world after completing their education.

Gowned professors.

INDIAN PEOPLE
9th December,
1906.

65. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 9th December, says that not to be left behind the High Court, in punctilious etiquette the fiat has gone forth from the Muir Central College that professors must appear in class rooms in their academic gowns. New men, new manners; but is there any college in India where professors are required to deliver their lectures in their academic gowns? And, if not, why is this innovation considered necessary in the Allahabad Government College? In the High Court some of the Judges have resisted the mandate to wear wigs, which will help to keep judicial heads particularly cool in May and June. In the college we do not know whether any professor will venture to disobey the mandate of the principal. Equal attention is being paid, we are told, to the manners of boys, whether they should sit in class with their caps on or off and so on, while their studies are being incontinently neglected. Is the Muir Central College to be converted into a college of heraldry, or a graduating institution in court and durbar etiquette?

HINDOSTHAN.
9th December,
1906.

Technical education in Bengal.

66. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 9th December, feels highly gratified to learn that the National Industrial Association of Bengal which has done much good work ever since it has come into existence, proposes to send out one hundred and forty students during the ensuing year with a view to enable them to complete their technical education in foreign countries.

MUSAFIR,
30th November and
8th December,
1906.

Primary education.

67. The Musafir (Agra), while referring in its combined issue of the 30th November and the 8th December, to the system of free primary education given to children in England and to the efforts of the socialists to impress upon Government the necessity of providing free boarding and clothing for students receiving such education, expresses a hope that these efforts will be crowned with success, and points out with regret that the Government of India does not feel prepared even to impart free education to the children of its Indian subjects.

SANSAR MITRA,
11th December,
1906.

Primary education in India.

68. The Sansar Mitra (Allahabad), of the 11th December, while referring to the inquiries made by the Government of India inviting the opinions of the several local Governments on the subject of free primary education in India, says that the poverty of the Indians should appeal all the more strongly to the feelings of Government in inducing it to introduce this reform in imitation of the civilized nations of the West. The editor points out that free education is in keeping with the traditions of India, and suggests that its introduction from the very beginning will be far more conducive to the spread of education than a gradual remission of fees.

GARHWALI,
November, 1906.

The Ram Tirath memorial in Terhi.

69. The Garhwali (Dehra Dun), for November, says that considering that Swami Ram Tirath was an advocate of high education, the Maharaja who had great respect for him during his lifetime could commemorate his death in no better way than by raising the state school to the standard of a college, so as to facilitate the propagation of high education amongst hillmen. The editor points out that the Garhwal Union should start a Press, and the residents of Terhi should open a public library, which coupled with the Maharaja's college, will supply the three long felt wants of the neighbourhood.

BRAHMAN SARVASWA,
October, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

70. The Brahman Sarvaswa (Etawah), for October, says that the blood and the fat of cows and swine are used in the refinement of foreign sugar, which is contrary to the religious prejudices of Hindus and Muhammadans. It is therefore desirable that they should boycott foreign sugar and do all that they can to promote the swadeshi movement, which it is to be hoped will not be discountenanced by Government.

AL-AZIZ,
November, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

71. The editor of Al-Aziz (Agra), while referring in its issue for November to the prominent position that the Indians held in the scale of nations in the past, points out the necessity of their keeping up their interest in the swadeshi movement, and regrets to notice that the zeal of the Bengalis is beginning to flag in this direction, as they find that it is practically useless to entertain any hopes to reopen the partition question.

AL-AZIZ,
November, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

72. The editor of Al-Aziz (Agra), for November, while referring to the remarks of His Excellency the Governor of Madras, who pointed out in his speech delivered on the occasion of laying the foundation stone of the Agricultural Research Institute, that the swadeshi movement had his full sympathy in so far that it promoted indigenous arts and manufactures without boycotting foreign articles, says that the swadeshi movement should go hand in hand with boycott, even if it be at some risk and sacrifice to the Indians.

KASHMIR DARPAN,
November, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

73. A correspondent in the Kashmir Darpan (Allahabad), for November, who regards the swadeshi movement as the panacea for all existing evils, says that the perseverance of the Bengalis in promoting the movement and in boycotting foreign manufactures is highly creditable. He then expresses his gratification at the conduct of a Bengali youth who, while undergoing prosecution on a charge of overstepping the limit of law and propriety in his zeal for the movement, refused to sign the charge sheet with a foreign pen, and concludes with exhorting the public to promote the swadeshi cause, and with warning tradesmen against the shameful practice of passing off articles of foreign manufacture as swadeshi and exacting exorbitant prices from their countrymen.

INDIAN PUNCH,
4th December,
1906.

Boys' swadeshi sabha.

74. The Indian Punch (Budaun), of the 4th December, feels highly gratified at learning that a swadeshi sabha, consisting of boys below the age of twelve, has been formed at Benares. Boys above the age of twelve and those who use foreign articles will be rigidly excluded from the sabha, which has been established with the object of imparting technical education to its members.

HINDOSTHAN,
5th December,
1906.

Babu Surendra Nath Banerji and the swadeshi movement.

75. The English Hindosthān (Kalakankar), of the 5th December, says that Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji is the great apostle of boycott and resignation. For a time he lost all confidence in agitation and definitely repudiated it, and he believed that the political salvation of the country lay in those two processes which constituted according to him the "new movement." He has now given a proof of his practical adhesion to that movement by allowing himself to be elected Chairman of the North Barrackpur Municipality.

RAHBAR,
7th December,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

76. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th December, says that a swadeshi meeting attended by over one thousand Hindus and Muhammadans was held at Maqbulganj (Lucknow) on the 25th November last, and that the necessity of promoting indigenous manufactures and of boycotting foreign goods was impressed on the audience.

Pandit Kashi Prasad, Babu Qismat Rai, Pandit Suraj Prasad and Babu Bānarsi Lal, who were among the chief speakers of the day, exhorted the public to treat with contempt such of the newspapers as oppose the swadeshi movement, or as tend to widen the gulf between Hindus and Muhammadans.

ARYA MITRA,
8th December,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

77. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th December, while pointing out that the mullahs of Ispahan have gone so far as to refuse aid at the funerals of persons using foreign articles, besides boycotting them in their lifetime, asks if Indian Muhammadans who oppose the swadeshi movement merely with a view to humour Anglo-Indian officials will not take a lesson from their co-religionists in Persia.

ARYA MITRA,
8th December,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

78. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th December, says that the swadeshi agitation is beginning to lead to practical results, as shown by a note in the last Administration Report for Bengal pointing out that the weavers there have returned to their hereditary avocation, and that it will not be long before their manufactures excel foreign products in quality and exquisiteness of texture.

ARYA MITRA,
8th December,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

79. A correspondent in the Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 8th December, says that the poverty of India is due chiefly to the preferential consideration that foreign articles receive at the hands of Indians owing to their better appearance though they are wanting in durability. He exhorts the Indians to encourage indigenous products, to promote technical education and to boycott foreign articles, so as to check the drain of Indian wealth into foreign countries; and concludes with pointing out that they should not miss the present opportunity of bringing about the regeneration of the country, as time and tide wait for no one.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
8th December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

80. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th December, while referring to the conduct of certain students at Rangpur, who shaved the beard of a Muhammadan because he was purchasing foreign goods, says that far from promoting, violent measures will considerably impede the progress of the swadeshi movement, and will tend to widen the breach between Hindus and Muhammadans who should, however, co-operate in encouraging indigenous arts and manufactures in spite of their political differences.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ.
8th December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

81. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares) of the 8th December, says that the reply of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of these Provinces to the Vaishya Mahasabha deputation should set at rest all apprehensions regarding the hostile attitude of Government towards the swadeshi movement, and points out the interest taken by Sir James Digges LaTouche in advising the delegates to make new inventions and to promote indigenous arts and manufactures.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
8th December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

82. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares) of the 8th December, regrets to find that Munshi Sajjad Husain, the editor of the Oudh Punch (Lucknow) showed great lack of moral courage by refusing to take the chair at the fifteenth swadeshi meeting held at Ganeshganj in spite of repeated requests from the audience. The editor says that the pandal was crowded to suffocation, and of the thousands of persons present many could not find room to stand. Of the speakers who addressed the meeting Munshi Amir Ali made the most effective speech which was both witty and instructive.

HINDOSTHAN.
9th December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

83. The Daily Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of the 9th December, while eulogizing the aims and objects of the Central Association for promoting indigenous arts and industries in India, says that the foundation of industrial schools in important cities and towns, with similar provincial schools all over the country and a central school at Trichinopoly at State cost, will tend to facilitate the regeneration of India. The editor points out that the use of swadeshi stationery in Government and public offices, the encouragement of weaving on modern lines, and of other indigenous arts and manufactures by Indian capitalists, and the appointment of a commission by Government as proposed by the Central Association to study Indian Arts and Industries will prove very beneficial to the country. He suggests that every attempt should be made to ensure that swadeshi articles are in no way inferior in design and quality to those at present used in Government offices, before any application is made to Government.

OUDH AKHBAR,
10th December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

84. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 10th December, says that Babu Surendra Nath Banerji pointed out in his lecture at Bombay that a union amongst the nations inhabiting India is essential to the regeneration of the country. He pointed out that the swadeshi movement is based on a love of the country and not on a hatred for other countries, and that the Indians are in no way to blame for any bitter feelings that may have come into existence owing to the encouragement given to indigenous products, which is essential to the material prosperity of India.

BHARAT JIWAN,
10th December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

85. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 10th December, contains a dialogue between two persons attributing the poverty of India to the export of grain and to the use of foreign articles by Indians. The refinement of foreign sugar by means of bovine blood and bone-ash, and the process of sizing piece goods by the use of fatty substances forbidden by the religion of Hindus and Muhammadans are treated with considerable prominence. The editor has likewise reproduced certain verses from a correspondent who appeals to the religions susceptibilities of his countrymen and asks them to adhere to their doctrines even if it be at the risk of their life and property, as the trials they had to undergo during the Muhammadan rule and the mutiny were not sufficient to affect their adherence. He concludes with exhorting them to boycott foreign sugar from the country on religious grounds.

BHARAT-JIWAN,
10th December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

86. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 10th December, expresses its satisfaction at finding that the swadeshi movement is gaining ground throughout the country. The editor attributes this success to the sudden wakefulness of the country which has been brought about by the partition of Bengal, and suggests that the movement can become a grand success only if swadeshi shops are opened in cities and villages alike, and articles of swadeshi manufacture are encouraged by every individual living in India.

HINDOSTHAN,
11th December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

87. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 11th December, exhorts Indian capitalists to follow the example of Seth Gobind Das of Bombay, who has started a swadeshi association with a sum of fifty thousand rupees and is doing all he can to promote indigenous arts and manufactures.

HINDOSTHAN,
11th December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement and the Police in Bakerganj.

88. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 11th December, disapproves of the conduct of the Bakerganj police in instituting inquiries about persons who advocate the cause of the swadeshi movement, and of those who have been ill used for boycotting foreign manufactures. The editor remarks that such undue interference is intended to impede the progress of the movement, and is open to objection as there is nothing unlawful in promoting its cause or in using indigenous products.

HINDOSTHAN,
14th December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement.

89. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 14th December, while eulogising the enterprising spirit of the Marwaris who have started a mill in Calcutta with a capital of five lacs of rupees, and deprecates the attitude of great Indian capitalists who bury their wealth underground or invest it at small interest in banks. The editor suggests the desirability of their laying it out in opening mills and factories so as to bring about the regeneration of India in the near future by checking the drain of the wealth of the country.

SANATAN, DHARMA PATAKA,
December, 1906.

Foreign sugar.

90. A correspondent in the Sanatan Dharma Pataka (Moradabad), for December, says that the use of foreign sugar has been forbidden by the local association at Parichhatgarh (Meerut) and that a resolution has been passed rendering delinquents liable to a fine of twenty-five rupees, in addition to excommunication. He concludes with the remark that all the foreign sugar available in the local market has been sent away to Meerut to check its further use immediately.

HINDOSTHAN,
8th December, 1906.

Foreign sugar.

91. The Daily Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of the 8th December, while eulogizing Swami Shankarsan Ramanuj Dass of Chitrakote for dissuading the public from using foreign sugar, exhorts other sadhus to follow his noble example, as such action on their part is sure to bring about the regeneration of India at no distant date.

OUDH AKHBAR,
14th December, 1906.

Country sugar.

92. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 14th December, says that a large meeting was held at Sitapur with a view to promote the use of foreign sugar and the cultivation of sugarcane. Maulvi Sulaiman Ahmad, Talukdar, was in the chair. Maulvi Abdul Qadir, retired Deputy Collector, pointed out in an able speech that the use of foreign sugar was against the religious prejudices of the Hindus and was not approved of by the Muhammadans owing to the use of bone-ash and other revolting substances in its preparation and refinement. He pointed out that a co-operation of the public and the confectioners was essential for resuscitating the sugar industry which is fast dying out in this country. Mushi Murlidhar and Babu Chhail Behari Lal, Vakils, and the chairman advocated the necessity of acting on Maulvi Abdul Qadir's suggestion; and exhorted the Hindus and Muhammadans to co-operate in the matter, and the audience was assured that their action in this matter could in no way give any offence to European officers who looked upon the movement with approval.

AL-AZIZ
November, 1906.

Friendly relations between Hindus and Muhammadans in Tibet and South Africa.

93. Al-Aziz (Agra), for November, ascribes the existing sympathy between the Hindus and Muhammadans in Tibet (?) and South Africa to the spread of education, and points out that they were quite indifferent to each other's interests only a few years back, when education had not produced its ennobling influence on their minds.

.NAIYAR-I-AZAM.
5th December, 1906.

Strained relations between the Aryas and Muhammadans.

94. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 5th December, regrets to find that the stirring speeches of the Aryas appeal so strongly to the feelings of the Muhammadans as to dupe them into regarding them as friends and well-wishers, without for a moment realizing the stern fact that the Hindus have from time immemorial regarded the very touch of a Muhammadan to be contaminating. The editor points out how usurious Hindus have dispossessed them of their estates, have done everything in their power to exclude them from Government appointments, and have published insulting attacks on the Prophet and the Qoran, as illustrated by certain publications in the Musafir (Agra) of the 30th October. He exhorts the Muhammadans to hold themselves aloof from the Hindus and to have nothing to do with the Congress and the swadeshi movement. He concludes with warning the editor (of the Musafir) against his conduct.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
8th December, 1906.

Strained relations beween Hindus and Muhammadans.

95. A correspondent in the Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 8th December, while condemning certain remarks in a previous issue of the paper as the outcome of prejudice, suggests that co-operation between Hindus and Muhammadans is essential to the regeneration of the country, and exhorts the educated classes, correspondents and editors of papers to try their utmost to foster friendly relations between the two communities, and to refrain from publishing matter calculated to produce estrangement.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
th December, 1906.

Strained relations between Bengalis and Muhammadans.

96. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th December, says that the revolutionary views of the Bengalis deserve the serious attention of Government, and points out that there is every danger of a class of Extremists like the Nihilists of Russia coming into existence, who will make things very uncomfortable. The editor points out that the Bengalis are extremely hostile to Muhammadans, as was evinced by the recent disturbance at Barisal, where certain Hindus passed alongside of a mosque and kept on shouting Bande Matram in spite of protests made by the Muhammadans who were offering their prayers.

ARYA MITRA,
8th December, 1906.

Strained relations between Europeans and Indians.

97. The Arya Mitra (Agra) of the 8th December, referred to an altercation and scuffle between some Indians and four European soldiers on King's Road in Ludhiana and said that it was due to one party claiming racial superiority and consequent immunity from law.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
8th December, 1906.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

98. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 8th December, says that the Muhammadans are split into parties and factions, and any attempt on their part to promote friendly relations between Hindus and Muhammadans appears therefore ridiculous. The editor deprecates the support given by certain Muhammadans to the Indian National Congress, and views their hostile criticisms of the Muhammadan deputation with extreme regret and disapprobation. He points out that the Hindus bear a natural hatred of the Muhammadans, and co-operation with them cannot lead to beneficial results, and it is therefore highly desirable that the Muhammadans should have a separate political organization of their own, quite distinct from the Indian National Congress, which truly speaking is a Hindu institution.

OUDH AKHBAR,
11th December, 1906.

Union between Hindus and Muhammadans.

99. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 11th December, says that the intimate relations between Akbar and Raja Birbar, between Nawab Asfad-Doulah and Raja Jhaoo Lal and those betweeen the Nizam and Bansi Raja show very clearly that union between Hindus and Muhammadans is not impossible.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
12th December, 1906.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

100. The Aligarh Institute Gazette of the 12th December, while referring to the views of Revd. C. S. F. Andrews on the strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans says that it is very much to be regretted that things are going from bad to worse every day. The editor begins with saying that both parties are to blame, but holds the Hindus chiefly responsible as they began by starting the Indian National Congress, and initiated the movement in favour of Hindi. He thinks that the Congress is the root of all evil, that Sir Saiyid Ahmad thought it to be so, because the Muhammadans in his opinion were not sufficiently educated to profit by it, and that he dissuaded the Hindus and the Muhammadans in consequence, from taking any share in its deliberations. The tone in which the Congress makes its demands is highly objectionable to the Muhammadans, who otherwise would have no objection to it, if they could get a due share of their rights and privileges. The attempt to spread the use of Hindi is another cause of difference between the two communities, because it seems to challenge the supremacy of Urdu as the language of India. A difference of religion is likewise a cause of disunion between the two communities. He deprecates the conduct of the Hindus in trying to secure the co-operation of the Muhammadans in the Congress. He concludes with the remark that unity of religion is essential to the formation of a nation, and that no progress is possible unless and until the various races inhabiting India become welded into one homogeneous whole.

ZIYA-UL-ISLAM,
December, 1906.

The degeneration of Muhammadans.

101. The Ziya-ul-Islam (Moradabad), for December, attributes the degeneration of the Muhammadans to insufficient education among Muhammadans and to the extravagant aims of their leaders and reformers. The editor points out that the one thing needed at present is union amongst the several sects, who should be able to merge all differences and to make common cause in promoting their national interests.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
4th December, 1906.

Muhammadans in the Madras Presidency.

102. The Riyaz-ul-Akhbar (Gorakhpur), of the 4th December, says that His Excellency the Governor of Madras cannot explain the disproportionately small number of Muhammadans as compared with Hindus and Eurasians holding high offices in the Madras Presidency, and expresses its dissent from the remarks of the Pioneer that the Hindus and Muhammadans are one nation.

AL-AZIZ,
November, 1906.

Export of Indian wheat to foreign countries.

103. The editor of Al-Aziz (Agra), for November, while referring to the large export of wheat from Karachi, which the Pioneer anticipates with satisfaction in the near future owing a rise in its price in foreign marts, prays Government to consider how this step will affect India.

BRAHMAN SARVASWA,
October, 1906.

The poverty of India.

104. The Brahman Sarvaswa (Etawah) for October, says that poverty is constantly on the increase in India, that a certain European is said to be making large purchases of ghi with the intention of selling it at a high rate during the Agra Durbar. The editor attributes the scarcity and high rate of ghi to the constant slaughter of a large number of cows and buffaloes to supply meat. He says from personal experience that large quantities of meat are sent out from Etawah and other large stations for use in foreign countries, and that the scarcity of fodder is a great temptation to the sale of cattle. These and other similar calamities including the drain of money from the country are the chief causes of the ever-increasing poverty of India. He exhorts the Indians to rise from their deep slumber, to make Bande Mataram their watchword and to devote themselves heart and soul to the regeneration of the country by promoting the swadeshi movement.

RAHBAR,
7th December, 1906.

The poverty of India.

105. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th December, says that free trade has contributed no less than plague and famine to the poverty of India. The editor considers that Englishmen advocate free trade in India through purely selfish motives though they consider that the country is not yet prepared to profit by representative government.

UNION GAZETTE,
7th December, 1906.

The poverty of India.

106. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 7th December, attributes the poverty of India to a drain of money from the country, to the joint family system where one working hand has to support the entire family, to the abnormally large number of persons subsisting on public charity, and to the numerous contributions that Indians have to make over and above the fixed taxes levied from them periodically.

AL-AZIZ,
November, 1906.

The anniversary of Akbar.

107. Al-Aziz (Agra), for November, feels extremely gratified at the manner in which Hindus, Muhammadans, Parsis, and other communities celebrated the anniversary of Akbar in Bombay on the 15th October last, and remarks that unlike the anniversary of Sivaji, it is calculated to promote union throughout India.

RIYAZ-UL-AKHBAR,
28th November, 1906.

The life-president of the British Indian Association of the Talukdars of Oudh.

108. The Riyáz-ul-Akhbár (Gorakhpur), of the 28th November, says that the choice of the talukdars should fall on some person of approved merit, whose donations to public movements prove the sincerity of his interests, and suggests the names of Raja Tasadduk Rasul Khan and Raja Ali Muhammad Khan, who will do credit as life-presidents of the British Indian Association of the barons of Oudh.

HINDOSTHAN,
5th December, 1906.

The Mulkowal inoculation disaster.

109. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 5th December, says that the horrible story of the convict inoculations in the Philippines has had but one parallel, so far as our knowledge goes—namely, the Mulkowal disaster which put a stop to plague inoculation in the Punjab at the end of 1902. Presumably the experiments undertaken by the American health authorities were designed as a preliminary to a systematic policy of inoculation amongst the Philippines. If so, it will be safe to assume that the enterprise is at an end for the present. Ten deaths are reported in this case, against nineteen in the Punjab four years ago. It is a hideous business, and the lay public may well ask whether, if such experiments are to be permitted, it is not the duty of Government to reduce the risk by fixing a limit to the number of possible victims.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
6th December, 1906.

The Mulkowal disaster.

110. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 6th December, while referring to the inoculation of a number of people with M. Haffkine's virus to protect them against the plague says that it was the culmination of the series of errors made by the Government in dealing with this pestilence. The segregation camps, the forcible examination of houses by soldiers, the detention of railway travellers, the introduction of an empiric system of inoculation—every one of these measures is stamped with political unwisdom of the most unpardonable nature, and they form a black page in the history of the present rule. Wisdom has after all dawned upon the Government, and beaten by the plague it has ceased to fight it. We are all awaiting the result of the labours of the committee of experts, but, whatever their conclusions and their recommendations, the Government must never again embark upon that reckless course of prevention and cure which ended in the tremendous tragedy of Malkowal.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
6th December, 1906.

Asiatics versus Europeans.

111. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 6th December, says that there was a time when Asia could justly boast of its civilisation. Even in the zenith of its glory no Asiatic Government ever considered it wise or just to frame any laws to exclude foreigners either from trade in the country or from occupying high posts in the estate if they were found to be capable of holding them, or at least were in the good graces of the monarch of the time.

* * * * * * *

In the present age every white nation is trying to exclude by legislation or otherwise the dark races, no matter how civilised they may be.

* * * * * * *

Now what should be done to safeguard the existence of these liberal-minded dark races? The answer is, try a policy of retaliation.

If a nation is selfish enough to devise foul means to oust the dark races from their country, the latter should adopt a policy of a similar nature.

MUSAFIR,
30th November and 8th December, 1906.

Native versus Feringhi.

112. The Musafir (Agra) says, in its combined issue of the 30th November and 8th December, that the Indians in Calcutta, finding that Englishmen persisted in addressing Indians as Natives in spite of repeated protests, pointing out that the word had degenerated in its use and was looked upon as a term of contempt, have started a society to retaliate the use of the words Babu and Native by addressing Englishmen as Mister and Feringhi. The editor says that though Indians are only paying back Englishmen in their own coin, yet such a course is very objectionable as tending to widen the gulf between the rulers and the ruled.

The views of Agamya Guru about Englishmen in India and England.

ANAND,
11th December, 1906.

113. The Anand (Lucknow), in its issue of the 11th December, says that Agamya Paramhansa Guru, (the lath Swami) an Indian Yogi of repute now in England, when asked by Englishmen at home to express his views on Indian affairs, said that the treatment accorded by Englishmen to Indians in England is exemplary, but their countrymen seem to lose the balance of mind as soon as they land in India.

Sir James LaTouche.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
6th December, 1906.

114. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 6th December, says that the right point of view from which to judge an administrator and his work is to examine not merely what he has done but what he has abstained from doing. A policy of masterly inactivity is often to be preferred to another of meddlesome activity. These are the tests that should be applied to an administration, and judged by these it will be found that on the whole Sir James LaTouche has deserved well of the province and the people.

House-rent in Allahabad.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
6th December, 1906.

115. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 6th December, while referring to the proposed transfer of the High Court to Lucknow says, that with that danger they feel their position to be secure and they have celebrated their victory by raising rents all round, that there is no other large city in India, where house-rent is so monstrously and disproportionately high as in Allahabad, and that even here the houses that fetched Rs. 50 before the outbreak of the plague four years back cannot be now had for Rs. 75, and some house owners seize on the pretext of a change of tenants to raise rents without any justification.

The partition meetings in Eastern Bengal.

RAHBAR,
7th December, 1906,

116. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th December, says that Sir Henry Cotton having invited Mr. Morley's attention to the active part taken by certain Government servants in organizing pro-partition meetings, the Lieutenant-Governor of the New Province has been instructed to see that the standing orders on the subject are obeyed. The editor thinks that the advice is opportune and that Mr. Hare needed it badly.

The partition of Bengal.

MUSAFIR,
30th November and 8th December, 1906.

117. The Musafir (Agra), while referring in its combined issue of the 30th November and the 8th December, to the admission of Mr. Morley that the partition of Bengal was a mistake, and that any attempt at rectifying the error will lead to further complications, says that it is very much to be regretted that statesmen with Mr. Morley's culture and breadth of view can adhere to a mistaken policy instead of acting according to the dictates of conscience.

Result of the Barisal disturbances.

UNION GAZETTE,
7th December, 1906.

118. The Union Gazette (Bareilly), of the 7th December, deprecates the attitude of the Bengali Press in eulogizing the Lieutenant-Governor of Eastern Bengal for having taken serious notice of the conduct of Messrs. Kemp and Emerson in connection with the late disturbances at Barisal. The editor says that far from restoring peace the action of Government is calculated to upset authority, and concludes with the remark that any interference with things done on executive and administrative grounds is calculated to make the Bengalis more turbulent and impudent.

The Peninsular Tobacco Company.

ADVOCATE,
6th December, 1906.

119. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 6th December, says that the European agent of the Peninsular Tobacco Company who is travelling all over India in a gigantic motor car advertising the company's manufactures, arrived a few days ago at Calcutta and was an object of much curiosity. In the few hours he was in Lucknow he did considerable business, selling, it is said, seven thousand rupees worth of cigarettes.

Tobacco-smoking.

HINDOSTHAN,
9th December, 1906

120. The Daily Hindosthan (Kalakankar) of the 9th December, eulogizes the conduct of the Maharaja of Baroda, who has made tobacco-smoking by boys within his state punishable under the law, as the practice is injurious both mentally and physically.

The Muhammadan Vigilance Committee.

CITIZEN,
10th December, 1906.

121. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 10th December, says that although the organizers of the Muhammadan Vigilance Committee are trying to prove that the movement is in no way directed against the Hindus and that their object is to establish better relations between the Hindus and the Muhammadans, it is feared, writes a correspondent, that mischief is already done. The Anglo-Indian correspondents have already wired to London quite a different version of the affair, and commented upon it as the counterballast to Hindu tyranny. Respectable Muhammadans are not active in their sympathy with the Vigilance Committee, and many of them frankly declined to join. Prominent among them is Maulvi Abdul Jubbar Khan Bahadur who was invited to preside over its deliberations. Good and obliging as he is, he is also a man of strong principle. He agreed to preside and came to Calcutta from his native village for that purpose. He however saw the draft resolutions to be proposed at the meeting and at once found out their anti-Hindu character, so he declined to have anything to do with the movement. This Vigilance Committee owes its origin to the fertile brains of two high officials of pronounced anti-Hindu feelings, one belonging to the India Government and the other to the Government of Bengal. The former wrote to the Aligarh leaders to give some political food to Muhammadan youths, for in his opinion mere Educational Conferences would no longer keep them satisfied. He however pointed out that political movements should not be directed against the Hindus apparently. He was in touch with the Bengal official who at first proposed that the two Muhammadan Associations of Calcutta should be amalgamated and formed into one strong Muhammadan organization, but as this did not find favour with the leaders of the two Associations, a new organization in the shape of the Vigilance Committee was the result.

TAFRIH,
14th December, 1906.

The Vigilance Committee at Calcutta.

122. The Tafrih (Lucknow), of the 14th December, says that an anti-vigilance Committee has been started at Calcutta with a view to counteract the Muhammadan Vigilance Committee. The Muhammadans who form the bulk of its members, have taken some Hindus also into the committee, and the resolutions already passed showed that the Vigilance committee is not a representative body. The anti-Vigilance Committee has been established with the object of promoting friendly feelings between Hindus and Muhammadans, and has undertaken to settle national differences amicably.

UNION GAZETTE,
7th December, 1906.

The Press in India.

123. The Union Gazette (Bareilly) of the 7th December, while referring to the prosecution of the Punjabi, says that such action on the part of Government tends to add to the importance of the offender and raises him to the dignified position of a national hero. The progress of education is always calculated to add to the importance of the Press, and it is on this account that the Press in Bengal is much more powerful than elsewhere, yet all the same it has failed to influence the Muhammadan community. It should not be looked upon by Government as a powerful weapon that should be viewed with any suspicion.

CITIZEN,
10th December, 1906.

The policy of the Punjab Government towards the Indian and the Anglo-Indian Press.

124. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 10th December, contains the following editorial note on the policy of the Punjab Government towards the Indian and the Anglo-Indian Press :—

Our readers are aware with what bloodthirstiness the Punjab Government have been pursuing the Punjabi for the alleged offence of exciting hatred between two different communities. The Government acknowledge the self-same offence having been committed by another journal, an Anglo-Indian one, and not only allow it to escape scot-free, but indeed, stoop to offer an apology for it. This invidious distinction made by the Punjab Government in its treatment of two rival papers cannot surely raise it in the estimation of the public.

MUSAFIR,
30th November and 8th December, 1906.

Scientific experiments on black Natives in the Philippines.

125. The Musafir (Agra), expresses its extreme regret in its combined issue of the 30th November and the 8th December, at the misfortunes of natives in the Philippine Islands who are treated no better than the brute creation, and are made the subject of scientific experiments which are apt to result in their death as occurred recently, owing to an infusion of cholera poison in their bodies. The editor points out that science which should bring about beneficial results to humanity is proving a source of misery to black natives.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
8th December, 1906.

Health Officers.

126. The Awaz-i-Khalq (Benares) of the 8th December, says that health officers are placed at a great disadvantage by not being allowed to charge any fees from the patients whom they examine and receive under their treatment.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
8th November, 1906.

Mr. Tajammul Husain, Sub-Judge, and the District Judge of Benares.

127. The Awaza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 8th November, while referring to the high-handedness of Mr. Tajammul Husain, the local Sub-Judge, in charging persons with contempt of court and in dealing with them in utter disregard of law, says that the Benares public have not been accustomed to this sort of treatment, and expresses a hope that he will mend his ways without necessitating a reference to higher authorities. The editor points out that difficulties of this sort and the complaints against the office of the Civil Judge are due to the fact that Mr. Patterson, the District Judge of Benares, refuses alike to see officials and local raises, and thus loses the opportunity of receiving much important information which no one cares to commit to writing.

OUDH AKHBAR,
10th December, 1906.

Use of explosives.

128. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 10th December, says that a fatwa has been obtained from Sunni and Shia maulvis with a view to discourage the use of rockets and other fireworks of a simlar nature, and it is proposed to move Government and to secure its aid in this behalf.

SANSAR MITRA,
11th December, 1906.

Examinations in Hindi.

129. The Sansar Mitra (Allahabad), of the 11th December, while recounting the various good things done by His Honour the present Lieutenant-Governor of the United Provinces, regrets to notice that sufficient attention has not been paid to Sir Antony MacDonell's orders regarding the examinations of officials in Hindi.

ADVOCATE,
13th December, 1906.

The need of District Associations.

130. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 13th December, says that one of the subjects which will be discussed most in the next Congress will be its constitution and the question as to the lines on which political work has to be carried on in future in the country. Referring to the views expressed in the Amrita Bazar Patrika and by Sir Pherozshah Mehta, the editor says that the country should have a network of political associations, spread in every district and if possible in every tahsil to keep up ceaseless activity. The activity has to be two-sided : on the one hand the association has to keep the Government informed of the real feelings of the people on every public question, to lay in as respectful language as possible, but at the same time forcibly put forward, all the grievances of the people whether in the matter of criminal administration, or on measures affecting their material condition; on the other hand it has to educate the masses as to their own rights : in fact to prepare the public opinion, so as to avoid the charge of public opinion being manufactured which now and then is made against the Congress movement. He is glad to find that measures have already been taken in Bombay, the Punjab and the United Provinces, and points out that what is wanted in these associations is real vitality and life to make them powerful, that numbers are not essential, as the Government will not be so much influenced with the numbers as with the reasonableness of the associations.

V.—LEGISLATION.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
4th December, 1906.

Procedure of complaints in courts.

131. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 4th December, says that written complaints suffer very often from the ingenuity of petition-writers who mould them to suit their own tastes, instead of adhering to the account given by the complainant. The editor therefore suggests the desirability of encouraging oral complaints, so that Magistrates may have first-hand information, by personally examining the complainant then and there. He invites the bar to throw further light by an expression of their views on the subject.

VI.—RAILWAY.

BRAHMAN SARVASWA,
October, 1906.

Corruption of Railway police and booking clerks.

132. The Brahman Sarvaswa (Etawah,) for October says that the police and Railway employés are invariably working in concert to extort money from the travelling public, particularly on occasions of fairs and religious gatherings. The editor remarks that passengers meet with considerable difficulties in purchasing tickets and securing seats in trains on such occasions, and expresses a hope that the railway authorities will take proper steps to remedy these evils.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th December, 1906.

Existing difficulties of passengers on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

133. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 5th December, suggests that contracts for catering arrangements should be given to a number of men instead of being left entirely in the hands of one individual, with due regard to the fact that relatives of railway employés are rigidly excluded from them. Endeavours should also be made to disabuse the public mind of the existing idea that the money realized by the contractors goes to the railway. As regards the coolies the editor suggests that they should be directly under the railway authorities, and should not be charged any fees for being employed on the line.

RAHBAR,
7th December, 1906.

Difficulties of passengers on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

134. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 7th December, says that the coolies on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway pay a certain sum every day to the contractors, and are therefore bold in making exorbitant demands from passengers. The editor also points out the illegality of sub-leases given to confectioners, and suggests that the railway authorities will do well to declare the action of the contractors illegal, and to authorize sub-lessees to recover the sum they have paid to the contractors by having recourse to law.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
5th December, 1906.

Waiting rooms for Indian ladies on the Oudh and Rohilkhand line.

135. The Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 5th December, while pointing out the difficulties to which pardanashin ladies are put by the removal of female-waiting rooms to a considerable distance from the station platform, suggests a reversion to the old system of setting apart a room in the main block for native females.

ADVOCATE,
6th December, 1906.

Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway Guards.

136. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 6th December, has contributed the following letter regarding the grievances of the guards on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway line :—"Our complaints and grievances are many and to detail them here would be like attempting an impossible task. I will therefore confine myself in this letter to a grievance or two. My first and foremost complaint is in respect of the methods employed on the Railway for the purposes of administering justice. Justice, I am told is blind, and I take this to mean that justice displays utter blindness when unjustly dealt to persons who come in search of her. She cares very little whether a prince or a pauper comes in search of her. She showers her blessings, mixed with mercy, equally on all, whether they be princes or paupers. Justice as administered to the inhabitants of this planet, proceeds from two channels : one divine and the other human. It is against this latter channel of justice we have cause to complain. The main channel of justice on this Railway is the Manager, who I believe, is an engineer of accomplished skill and tact, and if a reminder is necessary, I must say that the minor channels of justice with which the main is indispensably connected are at present blocked with dirt, and as this is generally felt to be the case, I earnestly urge the Manager to remove the dirt from the subsidiary channels, or the persons through whose instrumentality there has been an accumulation of dirt. If this course suggested to the Manager were carried into effect, I am sure he will find that he has unconsciously performed a miracle which had the power of silencing once for all the complaints and grievances of the Railway subordinates, and he will moreover find that the waters of justice flowing from the great reservoir, i.e., himself, are purer and healthier and drunk by the subordinates more freely and happily.

The Manager has introduced a new scale of pay and allowances for the guards employed on this railway with the very best of intentions; but his duties and responsibilities do not terminate with the introduction of reforms in the Railway administration and new scales as the one referred to. He should not omit to steadfastly observe that his best intentions are not frustrated by some of the officials under him. Has the Manager inquired into the daily complaints and grievances of some of these poor guards and drivers? Is it so or not that the claims of some of these deserving and senior guards have been totally neglected and sacrificed for the purpose of showering favours on the favourite ones? I urge you to look into the doings of some of these Railway deities, and cannot urge you too vehemently and too frequently to find out for yourself that in the eyes of some of these Railway deities, the most holy and the most capable are those only who visit their shrines frequently, A man's noblest (?) mistake is to be behind his time. The noblest (?) mistake you have made is in fixing some of these 'behind their times,' young, and inexperienced men in places of power and position in so important a centre of Railway administration as Lucknow.

The next complaint is the one regarding the recommendations made for dismissals of some of the worthy and tried subordinates of this Railway on grounds trivial and flimsy in their character. Recommendations for dismissals of subordinates employed on this railway have become at the present day as common as the loaves of bread supplied by some of the dirty bakeries of Lucknow to some of the public men of this place.

The Manager, I trust, will not be offended at my speaking the truth in this letter. But truth is truth; and truth will one of these days break open the sepulchre and appear in some of the offices belonging to the Railway administration.

SHIVAJI."

Dining cars in passenger trains.

BHARAT JIWAN,
10th December,
1906.

137. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), of the 10th December, points out that the suggestions of the secretary of the Kalesha Niwaran Sabha of Benares, pointing out the desirability of attaching dining cars to passenger trains have not so far led to any practical results, and that he has sought the co-operation of the Bharat Dharma Maha Mandal in consequence.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

Caste system in India.

KASHMIR
DARPAN,
October, 1906.

138. A correspondent in the Kashmir Darpan (Allahabad), for October, says that but for the very opportune teaching of Swami Daya Nand thousands of Hindus would have become proselytes to Islam and to Christianity. While admitting the advantages of Western education, and the necessity of Indians keeping themselves abreast of the progressive times, he points out that the time is yet far off when the Hindus will eat on the same table with Muhammadans or other communities living in India.

The Vedic Religion.

KASHMIR
DARPAN,
November, 1906.

139. A correspondent in the Kashmir Darpan (Allahabad), for November, says that the Vedas deal with a universal religion which applies to all ages and nations and that they can therefore claim to be a revelation from God. While pointing out the necessity of a common religion in order to unite the Indians into one nation, he urges female education in the interests of posterity and considers a wider diffusion of Sanskrit learning essential to the regeneration of India.

The Panchama (fifth) caste in India.

CENTRAL HINDU COLLEGE MAGAZINE,
December, 1906.

140. Discussing the obligations of the Hindus to the Panchama (fifth) caste, a correspondent in the Central Hindu College Magazine (Benares), for December, says that "we owe a distinct duty to these fallen peoples, and until we help to shatter the fetters that bind these poor wretches, socially and intellectually, in the different Provinces of India there is no chance of our blossoming out into a great and powerful nation, like the holy lotus flower of our sacred land from the primeval slime.

We have attuned our conscience to the touch of the Musalman; we have again attuned it to the touch of the Christian. Let us beware, while there is yet time, lest the poor despised pariahs learn the all too-fatal lesson, that their salvation lies only through wholesale conversions to the religion of their rulers."

Religious horrors in India.

ADVOCATE,
9th December,
1906.

141. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 9th December, while quoting a letter addressed by Mr. Labhshankar Lakshmidas, the well-known Kathiawar humanitarian to the Right Honourable, the Earl of Minto, makes the following comments on the religious horrors in India. We do not know if the Government of India, which is afraid to prevent open thefts and broad-day dacoities in the management of trusts in the country for fear of offending religious susceptibilities of the people, will ever come forward to amend the Anti-Cruelty Act of 1890, but much can be done by educating public opinion in the matter. A case of extreme cruelty like those referred to by the Right Revd. Henry Whitehead, D.D. in the Nineteenth Century for October, in the Jame Jamshed (Bombay), of the 18th October, and the Bombay Samáchar of the 26th October to which Lord Minto's attention has been invited by Mr. Lakshmidas, the great humanitarian of Kathiawar, to the District Magistrate of Lucknow by the police, in which certain Ahirs of Mahnagar were unmercifully causing, on the 19th October 1906 (the next day of the Dewali), the death of a pig. It was tied by the snout and tail, was butted and gored by cows and buffaloes on a public road, while the villagers were looking on. The Ahirs alleged that it was customary for them to do this every year at the time of Dewali. Surely cases of wanton cruelty like the above, which have not the sanction of riligion, ought to be put down in India.

The Vaishya Mahasabha.

142. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 10th December, says that in his reply to the deputation of members of the Vaishya Mahasabha, Sir James LaTouche did not fail to express his smypathy for endeavours that were being made by us for the development of Indian manufactures. All the same His Honour characterised the movement that gave impetus to such endeavours as 'the so-called swadeshi movement.' May we venture to respectfully invite His Honour's attention to Mr. Surendra Nath Banerji's recent remarks on the expression 'the so-called swadeshi movement' as used by certain high officials?

HINDOSTHAN,
12th December,
1906.

Uncharitable treatment of the poor in Calcutta.

143. The English Hindosthán (Kalakankar) of the 12th December, says that passers-by in Bow Bazar Street, Calcutta, the other day were compelled to witness a loathsome and extremely sad incident. An old Indian woman, actually foaming at the mouth, lay on the pavement dying. She was scantily and filthily clad, in an emaciated condition, and absolutely neglected and uncared for. A few Indian and East Indian loafers passed by unheeding, and although the woman lay within a few feet of a police thana and a few yards from a prominent charitable institution she was awarded as much practical sympathy as a dead animal usually receives!

(a).—Foreign.

Morocco.

JASUS,
7th December,
1906.

1. The Jásus (Agra), of the 7th December, says that European powers are much annoyed at the defeat Russia has sustained at the hands of Japan, and attributes the present attitude of France towards Morocco to the grudge that the Christian Powers of the west owe to the black races generally. The editor quoted the proverb that man proposes God disposes, and remarked that though the European powers intended to divide China amongst themselves they were defeated in their aims, and that nothing can therefore be said with certainty as to what turn matters might take eventually in Morocco.

The Shah of Persia.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
14th December,
1906.

2. The Rafiq Punch (Moradabad), of the 14th December, records with regret the death of the Shah of Persia on the 8th of December last, and considers it very inopportune and unfortunate for the Persians in that it has occurred so soon after the institution of the representative form of Government in Persia.

British rule and the Muhammadans.

OUDH AKHBAR,
18th December,
1906.

3. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 18th December, says that there is no reason for supposing, as Mr. Charvel has said in his lecture on Islam in London, that there is reason to apprehend that the Muhammadans of India may invoke foreign aid in their support. Their respect for the Sultan of Turkey is due to the fact that he is the protector of Mecca and Medina, and the aid they are giving towards the completion of the Hedjaz railway is not due to any ulterior motives and, whatever the relations between the Sultan and the Emperor of Germany may be, there seems no reason to apprehend any danger, as the Sultan is a prudent monarch and will on no account do anything that would involve him in war.

The relations between the Japanese and the Indians.

OUDH AKHBAR,
21st December,
1906.

4. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 21st December, says that Count Oma who presided at the fourth anniversary meeting of the Hindustani Japanese Association held on the 14th of October last, said that the Japanese respect the Indians, and sympathize with their lot which at present is no doubt an unfortunate one. He expressed a hope that the day will soon come when the sun of prosperity which has been expected for a long time will shine graciously on the Indians. The president eulogized the British rule in India, and expressed the hope that India will eventually take its proper place in the scale of nations. The editor points out that the views of the president though briefly expressed, require to be read with the greatest care, and he is at a loss to understand what he means by his reference to the sun which he says will one day shed its brightening rays on the Indians.

(b).—Home.

The Muhammadans in the National Congress.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
15th December,
1906.

5. The Cawnpore Gazette of the 15th December, says that the Muhammadans who are interested in the Indian National Congress will muster strong at the ensuing session in Calcutta, and will hold a separate meeting of their own to devise means for the propagation of Congress views amongst Muhammadans. The editor says that the Congress is evidently not a racial institution belonging to the Hindus alone, and expresses a hope that the ensuing Congress will settle for good the question that the Congress represents the interests of Hindus and Muhammadans alike.

The Indian National Congress and the Muhammadans.

BHARAT JIWAN,
17th December,
1906.

6. The Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), in its issue of the 17th December, while referring to a letter by Mr. Saiyid Haidar Raza, B.A., of Delhi, in various English papers in India, informing the public that a meeting of all Muhammadans joining the Congress will be held at Calcutta during the Christmas week to consider what steps should be taken in order to enlist the sympathies of their entire community in its behalf, expresses satisfaction at this appreciation of the Congress, which shows the growing predilection of the Muhammadans in favour of the movement.

The Muhammadan deputation.

JASUS,
7th December 1903.

7. The Jásus (Agra), of the 7th December, says that the Shias have as much right to send up a deputation of their own, as the Sunnis have to discard the Indian National Congress. The editor says that it will not be at all strange if the Shias or other minor sects disown the Muhammadan deputation that waited on the Viceroy on the 1st of October last, and send up their own deputation to protect their rights and privileges against the Sunnis.

AL BASHIR,
18th December,
1906.

The Muhammadan deputation.

8. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 18th December, says that the article in the Islah (which is a Shiah Journal with a very wide circulation amongst the Shiahs and Sunnis) on the Muhammadan deputation has caused much dissatisfaction among Shiah Muhammadans particularly in Bombay and Lucknow, who are thinking of sending up a deputation of their own to the Viceroy to show that their interests are quite distinct from those of the deputation that waited on His Excellency on the 1st of October last, which was practically a Sunni deputation. The editor points out that the Islah has the support of the entire Shiah community, and of such of the Sunnis as are opposed to the views of Sir Saiyid Ahmad, and should not therefore be looked upon as an insignificant opponent.

OUDH AKHBAR,
19th December,
1906.

The Shia deputation.

9. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 19th December, regrets to learn from the Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), that the Shias are thinking of sending a deputation of their own, as the deputation that waited on His Excellency the Viceroy on the 1st of October last is not calculated to represent their interests properly. The editor says that such a step cannot fail to lower the Shiah and Sunni communities alike in the eyes of the Viceroy, and to make the deputation of the 1st October a force he exhorts both sects to settle their differences privately instead of giving the public an opportunity to laugh at them.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
16th December,
1906.

The Muhammadan Political Association.

10. The Mukhbir-i-Álam (Moradabad), of the 16th December, says that arrangements have been made with the Conference Standing Committee to finish the business connected with the Conference on the 29th instant, so as to enable the "All-India Muslim Confederacy" to transact its business on the 30th. The editor, while regretting that the suggestion to hold a meeting of the Confederacy has been made too late to admit of satisfactory arrangements being made, expresses a hope that Nawab Vikár-ul-Mulk's efforts in this direction will be crowned with success, and that young Muhammadans will take their due share in protecting their rights.

ADVOCATE,
16th December,
1906.

The Moslem All-India Confederacy.

11. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th December, while discussing the views of the Hon'ble Nawab Salim-ullah Khan on the Moslem All-India Confederacy, says that the programme laid down by the Nawab of Dacca is a programme which is merely destructive and likely to cause estrangement of feeling between workers for the public cause. It writes as follows :—

> "We do hope that a sufficiently large number of men, free from prejudices due to local causes in Eastern Bengal, would be present at Dacca to see that an organization is not started in the country in the name of the Muhammadan community as a whole which without doing any good to the community is likely to set back the hands of progress. Divergence of opinion is to be welcomed but not a controversy for mere countroversy's sake.
> Whatever might be said to the contrary, and however desirous Maulvi Rafiuddin might be to persuade the English public to believe through the columns of the London Times that the educated Muhammadans throughout the country are actuated by the same anti-Hindu, anti-Congress and anti-progressive feeling as some gentlemen in Dacca are. In the Lucknow meeting there were a number of level-headed gentlemen who made it quite clear that the protection of Muhammadan interests did not necessarily mean injury or antagonism to the interests of their neighbours. And we have every confidence in these gentlemen that they will not allow themselves to play into the hands of the opponents of Indian progress"

ANAND,
18th December,
1906.

The proposed All-India Muhammadan Confederacy.

12. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 18th December says, that the All-India Muhammadan Confederacy which the Nawab of Dacca proposes to form with a view to counteract the Indian National Congress, will eventually meet the fate that has befallen its sister-institution, the Anti-congress movement.

ANAND,
18th December,
1906.

District political associations.

13. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 18th December, says that the formation of district political associations will facilitate the political training of the masses, and act as a check to the hostile criticism of the opponents of the Congress, who point out that it represents the opinion of the educated community only.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
16th December,
1906.

British rule in India and the feelings of Indians.

14. A correspondent in the Awáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 16th December, publishes some verses to the effect that Englishmen wish to bring the whole world under their sway, that the Secretary of State wishes to exclude well-wishers of India from the Councils, that British tradesmen wish to monopolize the trade in India, that British Residents try to spread discord in the families of the Chiefs in whose States they are posted, and that native raises do not care what becomes of their estates so long as they can get titles. The Pioneer wishes that the native press should be gagged, the native press in its turn wishes that the public should be allowed a share in the administration of the State, the Congress wishes to get freedom and self-government, Indian reformers wish that the Indians should no longer stand in need of European manufactures, and the Indian public wishes that the export of grain to foreign countries should be stopped.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
16th December,
1906.

The identity of the I.C.S.

15. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 16th December, while referring to the statement of the Empire that the writer of the letter signed "I. C. S." has been found out and punished departmentally, makes the following remarks:—With regard to the statement of the Empire that the writer of the letter signed "I. C. S." has been found out and departmentally punished, the Pioneer says that it is unfounded and Lord Minto is incapable of such inquisitorial proceedings. Against this contradiction we have the assertion of the Bengalee that the writer of the letter is Mr. H. C. Burns, I.C.S., lately Director of Land Records and Agriculture in Eastern Bengal and Assam. This officer has gone on long furlough and is not coming back to his old appointment. It would be improper to call upon the Pioneer to admit or deny the identification of the writer of the letter in question, but the charge brought against Lord Minto, assuming that Mr. Burns is the writer and has been punished, is untenable. Discipline must be maintained and there are standing orders that no public servant shall give any information about his department or attack the Government he serves in the public press. A violation of these orders involves punishment and inquisitorial methods for the detection of the offender cannot be condemned. We ourselves think that the regulations about public servants contributing to the Press should be liberally interpreted, but such inflammatory writing as the Pioneer published goes beyond the bounds of criticism and the writer, if a responsible official, must abide by the consequences.

AL BASHIR,
18th December,
1906.

The regimé of Sir James Digges La-Touche.

16. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 18th December, says that the various addresses that are being presented to the ruling Lieutenant-Governor by various associations and communities show that the present regimé has been liked universally, and that it contrasts remarkably with the tyrannical rule of Sir Antony MacDonnell, extending over six years during which his pro-congress and pro-Hindi proclivities and his anti-Urdu measures were a source of considerable danger to the Muhammadans. The editor points out that the trustees of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College were compelled by force to hold themselves aloof from the defence of Urdu, and that the supporters of the Nadwa were so alarmed that some of them had to leave the province. He rejoices to notice that His Honour the present Lieutenant-Governor has given the public distinctly to understand that the Urdu is the vernacular of the United Provinces, and that he has made a knowledge of Urdu and Hindi alike compulsory in schools.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR,
18th December,
1906.

Self-Government in India.

17. The Sulaimáni Akhbár (Benares), of the 18th December, expresses its dissent from those who think that India has been won by the sword, and that much blood will have to be split before it regains its freedom. The editor points out that the Indians have made over their country to Englishmen willingly, that the latter will be equally willing to leave the administration of India in the hands of the Indians as soon as they become sufficiently qualified for the purpose. He concludes with remarking that the British Government is not autocratic like that in Persia, nor can the Indians be so ungrateful as to think of rising against their rulers.

JASUS,
7th December,
1906.

Indian colonists.

18. The Jásus (Agra), of the 7th December, expresses its extreme regret at the attitude of Government in turning a deaf ear to the grievances of Indian colonists, who have to submit to indignities of all sorts in British colonies, where they should have received much better treatment as loyal subjects of the King-Emperor. The editor is grieved to find that their agitation against the oppression to which they have to submit is likely to be treated as seditious.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

JASUS,
7th December,
1906.

The visit of the Amir of Kabul to Hyderabad.

19. The Jásus (Agra), of the 7th December, while referring to the views of a correspondent regretting that the Nizam of Hyderabad has not invited the Amir of Kabul to be his guest, says that the Nizam may have been led to adopt this course by political considerations. The editor agrees with his correspondent in deploring the lack of interest on the part of the Nizam in the matter of sending students to complete their education in Japan and other foreign countries, but suggests that such action may be looked upon by the suzerain power with disapprobation, and concludes with the remark that there is no necessity to criticise the Nizam, when even the Sultan of Turkey is afraid of promoting friendly relations amongst the Muhammadans.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
8th December,
1906

The visit of the Amir of Kabul to Delhi and Agra.

20. The Kanauj Punch, of the 8th December, says that the forthcoming visit of the Amir has led to a general rise of prices of articles of every day use, which is causing considerable anxiety to the poor. The editor suggests that Government should import supplies from different districts instead of depending entirely on Delhi and Agra for the purpose.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th December,
1906.

The Amir of Kabul at Aligarh.

21. A correspondent in the Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of the 12th December, says that the trustees of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, should spare no pains to make the arrangements worthy of the rank and position of their royal visitor and guest, the Amir of Kabul, who will visit the college on the 16th of January next. He suggests that an address in Persian should be presented to the Amir, and points out that Maulana Abdul Hamid who is at present in the service of His Highness the Nawab of Rampur is the best person to draft and read the address in Persian.

JASUS,
14th December,
1906.

The visit of the Amir of Kabul to India.

22. The Jásus (Agra), of the 14th December, says that the views expressed by the London Times show that the ensuing visit of the Amir of Kabul is not altogether free from political considerations. It is understood that the Government will ask the Amir to place the frontier occupied by the Jirgas under British control, and that it will then share the country so recovered with Russia, or keep it entirely in its hands. This will obviate the necessity of any further show of hospitality or friendship to the Amir, as the power of Russia has already been completely crippled by her recent defeat. The editor is afraid that any refusal on the part of the Amir to cede the frontier will lead to bloodshed in the near future, without giving the Amir any opportunity to replenish his internal resources, and concludes with the hope that the British Government will be contented with its present acquisitions.

RAHBAR,
14th December,
1906.

The forthcoming darbar at Agra.

23. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th December, says that the treatment accorded to Native Chiefs and Princes at the last Delhi darbar was far from encouraging, and that it is to be feared that a large number of Native Chiefs will put forth every plausible excuse they can, to avoid their presence at the forthcoming darbar at Agra, unless they find themselves compelled to attend.

SAHIFA,
19th December,
1906

Presents for the Amir of Kabul.

24. A correspondent in the Sahifa (Bijnor), of the 19th December, says that the Muhammadans in the various cities through which the Amir of Kabul passes in the course of his coming visit to India should make it a point to present him with articles of local interests and that they should not content themselves with merely presenting addresses as His Highness is an oriental potentate, and may be expected to like oriental customs.

III.—Native States.

JASUS,
7th December, 1906

Jaipur.

25. The Jásus (Agra), of the 7th December, regrets to notice that the Principal of the Maharaja's College at Jaipur has imposed heavy fines on two of the students belonging to the college on a frivolous excuse, merely because he happened to suspect them of contributing to the Jasus an article giving an account of the sad state of affairs in the college. The editor concludes with the remark that the students in question have eventually been compelled to leave the Maharaja's College with a view to join some Government institution in the United Provinces.

JASUS,
7th December, 1906.

Jaipur.

26. The Jásus (Agra), of the 7th December, contains a letter addressed by the editor to His Highness the Maharaja of Jaipur, wherein the former expresses his regret at the inattention of the Maharaja to the numerous evils existing in the administration of the State, and brought to his notice in the previous issues of the Jásus, and threatens His Highness with inviting the attention of Government to the existing state of affairs in Jaipur unless steps are taken immediately to put matters right before the close of the year.

RAHBAR,
14th December,
1906.

Hyderabad Deccan.

27. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th December, regrets to notice that Mr. Walker, the Financial Minister of Hyderabad, is proposing the reduction and dismissal of a number of officials of low salaries, so that the money thus saved may be spent in giving increments to Europeans. The editor is very sorry to learn that the Aurangabad College has ceased to exist, and that proposals are under consideration to reduce the number of schools at Hyderabad. The editor is of opinion that the reductions in the Nizam's forces will lead to disaffection, and that the general tone of the Nizam's dominions will suffer by a reduction in the number and expenses of schools and colleges.

JASUS,
14th December, 1906.

Tonk.

28. A correspondent in the Jásus (Agra), of the 14th December, says that the circular issued in Tonk does not appear to be tempered with justice, as it does not exempt old vakils from obtaining a degree in law to enable them to practice in the courts there, and suggests the desirability of its being modified so far as vakils of long standing are concerned.

IV.—Administration.

(a).—Judicial and Revenue.

ADVOCATE,
11th December,
1906.

Incompetent Magistrates.

29. The Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th December, contains the following general order and remarks on the incompetence of Magistrates in Faridpur:—The District Magistrate of Faridpur has issued the following general order:—

"Whenever a Magistrate decides that he is going to commit a case for trial before the Sessions Court, he must, before framing charge or writing the order of commitment, cause a brief of the case to be prepared and submitted to the Government Pleader (the same brief will be afterwards used in the prosecution of the case in the Sessions Court). The Government Pleader, after perusing the brief, will advise the Magistrate whether all the necessary evidence has been taken, and as to the charges that shall be framed. The Magistrate will then frame charges in the case and commit it."

We are not here so much concerned with the making of Magistrates subordinate to Government Pleaders as with the admission that the order makes. Mr. Marr practically admits that the Magistrates of his district are not legally trained so as to be able to frame the commitment charges properly. The Government Pleader may feel flattered at the compliment paid him, though the responsibility of the committal is also practically fastened upon him, but the humiliation of the committing Magistrates is complete.

SANSAR MITRA,
18th December, 1906.

Conviction of European Ticket Collectors at Allahabad.

30. The Sansár Mitra (Allahabad), of the 18th December, expresses its satisfaction at learning that two European ticket collectors have been sent up for trial by the Railway Police, Allahabad, for extorting money from a passenger, and that one of them has been sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment while the case of the other is still pending in court.

AL BASHIR,
18th December, 1906.

A separate High Court for Eastern Bengal.

31. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 18th December, says that Eastern Bengal is the only province which has a separate Lieutenant-Governor of its own but is under the High Court of another province. The editor points out this is a source of considerable trouble and expense to the general public of Eastern Bengal, and suggests that it is highly desirable that the new province should have a separate High Court of its own.

OUDH AKHBAR,
18th December, 1906.

Muhammadan Judges in Indian High Courts.

32. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 18th December, while expressing its gratification at the appointment of Mr. Shahdin to a Judgeship in the Punjab Chief Court, says that he had been recommended not only from Dacca but also by the Aligarh party, and it is a matter for rejoicing that Government has appreciated Mr. Shahdin's merit and ability.

ANAND,
18th December, 1906.

Muhammadan Judges in the High Courts.

33. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 18th December, rejoices at the appointment of Khan Bahadur Saiyid Muhammad as Inspector General of Registration of Bengal and of Mian Shahab-ud-din, Khan Bahadur, as Judge in the Chief Court of the Punjab, and says that the appointments are calculated to tend to lessen the clamour of the Muhammadans and to improve the existing relations between them and the Hindus.

ALIGARH INSTITUTE GAZETTE,
19th December, 1906.

The appointment of Muhammadan Judges in Indian High Courts.

34. The Aligarh Institute Gazette, of the 19th December, expresses its gratification at the appointment of the Hon'ble Sharf-ud-din, Barrister-at-Law, to a vacancy in the Calcutta High Court. The editor recounts the appointments of Muhammadans to high offices in Madras, Bombay, Bengal proper, Eastern Bengal and the Punjab and regards them as the outcome of the Muhammadan deputation.

SITARA-I-HIND,
4th December, 1906.

The Moradabad Municipality.

35. The Sitára-i-Hind (Moradabad), of the 4th December, received on the 20th December, says that the Municipal Secretary has been actuated by racial prejudices in closing the latrines in Asalatpura, which compels the Muhammadan females residing in that quarter to go to a public latrine at some distance from inhabitated sites, while the residents of mohalla Tawela who are Hindus, have been permitted to replace their mud latrines by pucca ones made of brick and lime. The editor invites the attention of the Chairman of the Municipal Board to the matter, and suggests that a close inquiry will disclose the real cause that has led to such unjust orders.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th December, 1906.

The Moradabad Municipality.

36. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th December, regrets to find that no steps have been taken so far to convert the brick road in mohalla Chah Nargan into a properly metalled road in spite of repeated suggestions regarding the desirability of the change. The editor points out that the Chairman of the Municipal Board could form an idea of the inconvenience felt by the public by driving one day over the brick road.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
16th December, 1906.

The Ghazipur Municipality.

37. The Awáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 16th December, complains of the insanitary arrangements at Ghazipur, particularly in the western part of the city. The editor says that the carcases of animals are allowed to lie in the streets for days until people living in the neighbourhood arrange to have them removed at their own cost, and expresses a hope that Pandit Rama Shankar, M.A., the present Chairman of the Municipal Board who himself is an Indian, will see that his fellow-countrymen have no more opportunities of making complaints of this sort.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR, 18th December, 1906.

Octroi duties on parcels in the Benares Municipality.

38. The Sulaimani Akhbár (Benares), of the 18th December, regrets to notice that the city office refuse to deliver any parcels without the production of a railway receipt by the addressee or some one of his servants, and that delay frequently happens in taking such delivery if the railway cannot furnish the required receipt at an early hour of the day, or if a holiday intervenes. The editor says that this practice leads to considerable inconvenience and to certain loss when the parcel contains fresh fruit. He concludes with inviting the attention of the Municipal Board to the matter, and hopes that steps will be taken to remove the difficulty.

NASIM I-AGRA, 19th December, 1906.

The Agra Municipality.

39. The Nasím-i-Agra of the 19th December, says that the practice of throwing the stinking water of cisterns and cesspools into the drains along public roads is calculated to contaminate the atmosphere and to spread pestilence, and should therefore be discontinued. The editor regrets to find that the local health officer has not been able to attend to the matter in spite of its having been brought to his notice repeatedly.

NASIM-I-AGRA, 15th December, 1906.

Liquor-shops within municipal limits.

40. The Nasím-i-Agra of the 19th December, points out that the constant noise and the foul language emanating from liquor-shops situated within municipal limits are a source of much public inconvenience; particularly to women who, while passing such shops, might frequently hear drunkards indulging in the filthiest language possible. The editor suggests that a market far removed from inhabited sites should be set apart for the sale of liquor, and that municipalities should take steps to remove the shops from densely populated quarters.

KANAUJ PUNCH, 8th December, 1906.

Free education.

41. The Kanauj Punch of the 8th December, disapproves of the dilatory action of Government in introducing free education in India, where poverty and want of work are a great drawback to the improvement of the resources of the country.

ARYA MITRA, 16th December, 1906.

Free education in India.

42. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th December, says that the example of His Highness the Maharaja of Baroda in introducing a better system of education was followed by the Maharaja of Myur Bhanj and Burdwan, and that the introduction of free education by the Maharajas of Kooch Behar, Myur Bhanj and Burdwan was not originally quite in consonance with the views of Government, though it has now invited the opinion of the several provincial Governments on the subject, lest its inattention to free education in British India should lead to public dissatisfaction.

HINDOSTHAN, 20th December, 1906.

Proposal for imparting free primary education.

43. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 20th December, rejoices to learn that the proposal for giving free primary education is under the consideration of Government, and expresses a hope that Lord Minto will be able to give effect to it during his viceroyalty.

JASUS, 14th December, 1906.

Western education in India.

44. The Jásus (Agra), of the 14th December, says that Government is making education very expensive, because it has realized that the difficulties with which it has to contend are due to high education.

HINDOSTHAN, 15th December, 1906.

Technical education.

45. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kalakankar), in its issue of the 15th December, feels highly gratified at learning that a weaving school has been recently opened at Calcutta with a view to train the children of the soil in the art of weaving, and points out that, if the Indians receive technical education in different arts and industries, and begin to manufacture articles of every day use, the regeneration of India may be counted upon as sure and certain, and concludes with exhorting Indian capitalists to start institutions of this nature all over the country.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
15th December,
1906.

The influence of western education on Indians.

46. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 15th December, says that western education produces a very harmful influence on Indians as no provision is made for their moral culture. The editor refers particularly to the deterioration of morals of students going to England to complete their education, and in graduates, and points out that the bulk of teachers have no sense of their responsibility regarding the moral culture of their students. He concludes with suggesting the desirability of Government interference in the matter, and considers the selection of a better class of teachers an imperative necessity.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
16th December,
1906.

The Muir Central College.

47. The Indian People (Allahabad), of the 16th December, while referring to a paragraph in one of its preceding issues regarding the tendency of the Principal of the Muir Central College to teach manners at the cost of other studies, says as follows :—We can conceive that our remarks about the Muir Central College should be resented, but we must deprecate any attempt to misinterpret them. Do our remarks bear the interpretation that we do not attach as much importance to the manners of our students, as for example, the Principal of the College himself? What we said was that the studies of the students of the higher classes were being sacrificed to lessons on manners, and an inquiry as to the progress made by the students will bear out the truth of our complaint. Then, again, in what code of manners is it laid down that students should wear a particular kind of head-dress, or a special kind of shoes when venturing into the presence of the Principal? We are afraid the present Principal has mistaken his vocation. He should have been the Military Secretary to the Viceroy, or at least a member of the Indian Civil Service, when he could have exercised his peculiar gifts freely and fully. We are further informed that the voluntary subscription of students to sports has been raised from Rs. 3 to Rs. 4, and objections by students have been met with a direction that they should produce letters from their guardians. In no province in India are students so amenable to discipline and easy to manage as in the United Provinces, but there is a growing dissatisfaction in the Muir Central College at the strange ways of the new Principal, and trouble appears to be brewing in this institution.

CITIZEN,
17th December,
1906.

Policy of Government in regard to mass education.

48. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 17th December, says that probably in the present state of the country the Government of India do not find it feasible to make Primary Education compulsory, thus following the successful example set by the enlightened Gaikwar. But what the alien Government cannot do, it is possible for our leaders to accomplish. Of course the latter have no power to force Primary Education on the ignorant masses, nevertheless, they can do much to open their eyes to the many advantages arising from a knowledge of the Three R's. In the meantime, we repeat we owe His Excellency Lord Minto a debt immense of endless gratitude for the educational policy his Government is about to inaugurate.

AL BASHIR,
18th December,
1906.

Education in Eastern Bengal.

49. Al Bashir (Etawah), of the 18th December, says that Urdu should take the place of Bengali in the Eastern Bengal in University examinations, and suggests that the new Province should have a distinct University of its own.

OUDH AKHBAR,
19th December,
1906.

The hospital and boarding arrangements of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh.

50. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 19th December, regrets to find that the students of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, who take every care to add to the good name and reputation of their Alma Mater, have been compelled to lay their grievances regarding the existing boarding and hospital arrangements before the public. Good and wholesome food and sound medical treatment are essential to the well-being of the students, and it is to be hoped that the Principal and the Honorary Secretary of the College will see that necessary steps are taken to bring about a better state of affairs.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
16th December,
1906.

Famine prices in India.

51. The Mukhbir-i-Álam (Moradabad), of the 16th December, attributes the high prices that are constantly prevailing in India to the failure of crops and to the large export of grain from the country. The editor points out that the failure of crops is due to the insufficiency of manure, necessitated by the sale of surplus cattle owned by cultivators, owing to the fact that large areas of land which were allowed to be fallow for purposes of pasture have recently been brought under cultivation, which in its turn has resulted in a failure of fodder for cattle.

SURMA-I-ROZGAR,
8th December, 1906.

Sir James LaTouche and the swadeshi movement.

52. The Surma-i-Rozgár (Agra), of the 8th December, says that Sir James Digges LaTouche while replying to the address of the Vaishya Maha Sabha said that the swadeshi movement if worked properly and if directed to promote indigenous arts and industries instead of boycotting foreign articles is sure to lead to very beneficial results, and pointed out in conclusion that if worked on different lines it is likely to do more harm than good to the country.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
8th December, 1906.

The swadeshi movement and the Partition of Bengal.

53. The Kanauj Punch of the 8th December, condemns the over zeal of the Hindus in the cause of the swadeshi movement regrets to see strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans, and exhorts them to work in harmony, as the Government cannot but treat both communities alike. The editor remarks that the pertinacity of the Hindus in agitating over the Partition question is becoming unseemly, and concludes with reminding them of the incalculable good that has resulted from the British rule, and urging them to confine themselves to loyal and constitutional representations.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
8th December, 1906.

Swadeshi cloth.

54. The Kanauj Punch, of the 8th December, says that swadeshi cloth is far more durable than cloth of foreign manufacture, and that, though apparently coarse and more expensive to begin with, it becomes much finer when washed. The editor suggests therefore that country piece-goods should be encouraged in preference to those of foreign manufacture.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
12th December, 1906.

The Partition of Bengal in America.

55. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 12th December, reproduces an article from the Akhbár-i-Ám (Lahore), pointing out that it was resolved at a large Anti-partition meeting held by Indian students at New York, that agitation over the Partition of Bengal should be kept up with unflagging zeal in spite of Mr. Morley's repeated replies to the effect that the partition was a settled question; and that the efforts of the Indians if persisted in were sure to be crowned with success. The meeting was allowed by a large number of American ladies and gentlemen who evinced great sympathy with the Indians on the Partition question. The proceedings commenced with the national song of Bande Mataram which has earned a world-wide fame and universal respect. It was said that the audience stood enraptured while it was sung, and joined in singing the chorus, and that American ladies and gentlemen encouraged the speakers with the words Bande Mataram whenever there was occasion for cheering. The editor points out that a young Muhammadan student was in the chair, and asks if the Nawab of Dacca will disclaim all connection with him owing to the active share he has taken in the Anti-partition meeting.

OUDH AKHBAR,
17th December, 1906.

Foreign sugar.

56. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 17th December, quotes passages from a book printed with the Bhárat Jiwan (Benares), showing that the quantity of bone-ash employed in the process of refinement is at times twice the quantity of sugar, as laid down in the Dictionary of Arts and Commerce. Dr. Hira Lal in his work on "Food and its adulteration" points out that foreign sugar is impure. The Mufid-ul-Mazarain for October 1903, says that it is prepared from a variety of ingredients, human urine being one of them. Dr. Finlay remarks that foreign sugar is like a cup of milk mixed with poison, that its use leads to a variety of diseases, it makes the body dry, is very heating in its effect, and weakens and impoverishes the blood. Mr. Taylor says in his sugar machinery that hot water and bovine blood are employed in refining foreign sugar. The article concludes with the remark that the facts noted above are borne out by the article on the refinement of sugar in the Encyclopædia Britannica.

OUDH AKHBAR,
18th December,
1906.

Foreign sugar.

57. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 18th December, says that foreign sugar is receiving strong opposition, that Punjab advertisements bearing the signatures of many influential men have been circulated widely, and the Punjab public has been exhorted to give up the use of foreign sugar and to use Cawnpore sugar instead, as it is free from any admixture of bone-ash and spirit. The trade in foreign sugar is evidently bound to suffer considerably in the Punjab as sugar worth fifty lakhs of rupees used to be imported in Amritsar alone, which is the centre of opposition at present.

SANSAR MITRA,
18th December,
1906.

Foreign sugar.

58. The Sansár Mitra (Allahabad), of the 18th December, has much pleasure in announcing that a confectioner in Rani-ki-Mandi (Allahabad), uses country sugar exclusively. The advertisement impresses the necessity of renouncing the use of foreign sugar on the ground that it is against the religious principles of the Indians.

SANSAR MITRA,
18th December,
1906.

Foreign sugar.

59. A correspondent in the Sansár Mitra (Allahabad), of the 18th December, feels highly gratified at learning that the residents of village Bamnipur in the Etawah district have been showing great enthusiasm in promoting the cause of the swadeshi movement, that certain leading members have been delivering lectures impressing the necessity of refraining from the use of foreign sugar, and concludes with the remark that Chaudhri Kunwar Singh has instructed the local confectioners to use country sugar exclusively in the preparation of sweetmeats.

TUHFA-I-HIND,
18th December,
1906.

Foreign sugar.

60. The Tuhfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 18th December, quotes references from Chamber's Encyclopædia showing that foreign sugar is refined by means of bone-ash, the white of eggs and blood. The editor says that he himself noticed the red colour of blood in a lump of sugar shown to him by a few friends. Considering that the internal use of blood is unlawful both amongst Hindus and Muhammadans, that foreign sugar is very deleterious to health and considerably less sweet than country sugar, he exhorts the Indians in general, and the Bijnor public in particular, to refrain from the use of foreign sugar.

HINDOSTHAN,
18th December,
1906.

Export of Indian leather.

61. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 18th December, while pointing out that India has contributed one-third of the total supply of leather to the United States during the year, expresses a wish that it would have been much better if the leather had been dressed and properly cured before being exported from the country.

JASUS,
7th December,
1906.

The strained relations between Europeans and Indians.

62. The Jásus (Agra), of the 7th December, says that the conduct of Europeans towards Indians, is not only uncompromising but tends also to widen the breach between the two communities, in spite of the fact that every one seems to feel the necessity of establishing friendly relations between them. The editor regrets to find that the Government is trying to gag the Press by threatening it with prosecutions instead of taking measures to check the tyranny and oppression of Europeans.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
12th December,
1906.

Europeans versus Indians.

63. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 12th December, says that Sir Henry Cotton deserves every credit for having the moral courage to express his appreciation of the character of the black nations of the East, as the present tendency of Europeans seems to be to take a very low view of everything that is oriental. The editor says that the East has held European countries under its sway for a considerable length of time, and thus proved its superiority over the West in the past. In conclusion he considers that the conduct of Mr. Rudyard Kipling in painting Indian habits and character as black as he can, is very objectionable considering that he depended on the Indians for his livelihood only a few years back while working as the sub-editor of the Civil and Military Gazette (Lahore).

RAHBAR,
14th December,
1906.

Strained relations between Europeans and Indians.

64. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th December, complains of the conduct of a European agent of Messrs. Kemp & Co., who after exhibiting some perfumes to a native dealer in scents at Allahabad, spoke of the swadeshi movement and of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji in a manner calculated to wound the feelings of Indians.

The editor invites the attention of Messrs. Kemp & Co. to the conduct of their agent, and suggests that dismissal alone would meet the requirements of the case.

RAHBAR,
14th December,
1906.

Strained relations between Europeans and Indians.

65. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th December, regrets to notice that a certain civilian in the New Province suggested that a garland of shoes should be placed round the neck of Babu Surendra Nath Banerji in case he visited his district, and that another called his dog Bande Mataram. The editor while condemning the conduct of these European officers considers it to be calculated to wound the feelings of Indians, and thinks that it cannot but tend to lower Europeans in their estimation. He concludes with the remark that the Lieutenant-Governors and Governors of various provinces and presidencies should keep their subordinates under proper control, and see that they do not indulge in extravagances of this sort.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
15th December,
1906.

Europeans and Indians.

66. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 15th December, while referring to the hatred evinced by Englishmen towards Indians in Vancouver, Canada, Australia, South Africa, Mauritius and Trinidad, says that without sympathy between the rulers and the ruled neither nation can be happy, and that Englishmen cannot fail to understand what the feelings of the Indians must be at finding that they are treated worse than brute creation by those who should feel most for them.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
15th December,
1906.

Europeans and Indians.

67. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 15th December, invites the attention of the railway authorities to the inconvenience that Europeans and Indians alike experience by travelling together in railway trains, and expresses a hope that necessary steps will be taken to afford no room for complaint to either class.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
16th December,
1906.

Europeans and Indians.

68. The Mukhbir-i-Álam (Moradabad), of the 16th December, while expressing its approval of the suggestions made by the Rahbar with a view to foster friendly relations between Europeans and Indians, regrets to notice that pressure is being brought to bear upon the Press to suppress all news relating to the high-handedness of Europeans. The editor points out that the best thing that can be done is to take some steps calculated to put a stop to such tyranny.

MUKHBIR-I-ALAM,
16th December,
1906.

Europeans and Indians.

69. The Mukhbir-i-Álam (Moradabad), of the 16th December, says that one Mr. George Ewing of Darjeeling was sentenced to a fine of ten rupees on a charge of assaulting a native carpenter (mistri) in spite of his efforts to escape the indignity of being charged and called up as an accused person. The editor suggests that Mr. Ewing's case should teach a lesson to such of the Anglo-Indians as are in the habit of disgracing natives.

NASIM-I-AGRA,
19th December,
1906.

Europeans and Indians.

70. The Nasim-i-Agra of the 19th December, while referring to the conduct of the second magistrate of Wambari towards the proprietor of the Nasir, says that experience confirms the public belief that it is useless to expect that justice will ever be done to Indians in cases where the party complained against is a European. The editor remarks that he cannot remember one single instance where the wrongs of a native have been redressed and an offending European has been brought to book. He learns from a correspondent in Mymensingh that the public there have decided to settle their grievances against their European assailants by appealing to force, instead of having recourse to law.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
16th December,
1906.

The Nasir and the second Magistrate of Wambari.

71. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 16th December, invites the attention of His Excellency the Governor of Madras to the conduct of the second Magistrate of Wambari, who is said to have sent for the proprietor of the Nasir on the pretext of looking into his accounts connected with the paper, and to have threatened him with sending him to jail and with suspending his paper because the paper was published in Urdu which the Magistrate could not understand. The fact seems to be that a number of articles that have appeared in the paper regarding the local municipality have given offence to the Magistrate, and have led him to adopt the attitude referred to towards the proprietor of Nasir.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
8th December, 1906.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

72. The Kanauj Punch of the 8th December, while applauding the zeal of the Arya Samajists, who subscribed no less than fifty-one thousand rupees on the occasion of the last anniversary of the Arya Samaj, Lahore, points out that their grand success in this direction was the result of co-operation, and exhorts the Muhammadans to take a lesson from the Hindus. The editor, however, is afraid that the disunion amongst the Muhammadans will ever prove to be a stumbling block in their way to progress.

RIYAZ-I-FAIZ,
12th December, 1906.

The re-union of Hindus and Muhammadans at Calcutta.

73. The Riyáz-i-Faiz (Pilibhit), of the 12th December, says that a Re-union Association was formed on the last Id day with a view to establish and foster friendly relations between Hindus and Muhammadans. The editor says that the credit in the matter is due to Messrs. A. Rasul and H. Ghaznavi, Barristers-at-Law, and to their friends who have done their best to make the movement a success. It was pointed out at the meeting that though professing different faiths the Hindus and Muhammadans belong to one nation, have one common ruler and one form of government, and that there is no reason why any ill-feeling should exist between them. The speakers urged that the Anglo-Indians likewise should co-operate with the Hindus and the Muhammadans in bringing about the regeneration of India and in promoting the cause of the swadeshi movement.

JASUS,
16th December, 1906.

Hindus and Muhammadans.

74. The Jásus (Agra), of the 16th December, regrets to notice that the Native Press, though admitting the necessity of friendly relations between the Hindus and Muhammadans, teems with matter calculated to widen the breach between the two communities, which cannot fail to injure both communities alike, and the Muhammadans in particular since they are so backward in education. The editor points out that the progress made by the Muhammadans is looked upon by the Christian world as fraught with danger, and remarks that they should therefore make common cause with the Hindus, who are prepared to meet them half way and to help them in their regeneration.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
15th December, 1906.

Strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans.

75. A correspondent in the Naiyar-i-Azam (Moradabad), of the 15th December, says that cow-killing is the one cause of the strained relations between Hindus and Muhammadans, and that the Congress and other political associations are only minor causes that have come into existence as various social, religious and political associations have been formed. He suggests that it is highly desirable that the Muhammadans should not persist in making sacrifices of cows on religious grounds.

OUDH AKHBAR,
20th December, 1906.

Christians and Muhammadans.

76. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 20th December, says that the comparison drawn by the Madras Times between the warlike Muhammadans and the cowardly Bengalis is undesirable and cannot fail to widen the breach between the two pasties. The editor points out that the Bengalis are not a cowardly people as the Madras Times thinks. They have achieved great success and made a name for themselves. He concludes with the remark that it is one thing to advocate the cause of the Muhammadans and quite a different thing to magnify them and to hold up another important section of His Majesty's subjects to ridicule and set off their good qualities to greater advantage.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th December, 1906.

The resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller.

77. The Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), while referring in its issue of the 12th December to the papers recently published in India concerning the resignation of Sir Bampfylde Fuller, says that they furnish conclusive evidence of his truthfulness and honesty, and of the wrong done to him. The editor remarks that the chief cause of his resignation was the decision he had arrived at against the views of the Syndicate, which he found himself unable to alter notwithstanding the wishes of the Secretary of State for India that he should modify it. The editor concludes with the remark that the publication of these papers must have disappointed the Bengalis, at finding that the reason of his resignation was the same as announced from the very beginning and that the proceedings had not been wrapped in mystery as they suggested.

ARYA MITRA,
16th December, 1906.

Sir Bampfylde Fuller's resignation.

78. The Árya Mitra (Agra), in its issue of the 16th December, while referring to the reduction of a certain civilian of Assam owing to the publication of a letter attacking the conduct of Government and the people alike in connection with the resignation of Sir Fuller, remarks that the action taken by Government in the matter is sure to conduce to peace in the country; and to deter others from expressing unsound views and indulging in opinions which are calculated to lead to public dissatisfaction.

JASUS, 14th December, 1906.

The Anglo-Indian Press and the Muhammadans.

79. The Jásus (Agra), of the 14th December, considers that the remarks of the Times recognising the superior merit of the students of the Muhammadan Anglo-Oriental College, Aligarh, and disparaging the rest of the Muhammadans indirectly are calculated to create feelings of jealousy amongst the Muhammadans. The editor concludes with exhorting the entire Muhammadan community to co-operate in promoting their common interests.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE, 16th December, 1906.

The Hindu Press.

80. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th December, regrets to find that the Hindu Press is far ahead of the Muhammadan Press in India, and says that the former is divided into two sections, the one consisting of such papers as try to appear friendly while they are really hostile, and are injuring the Muhammadans, and the second section consists of such as wage open war against the Muhammadans. The editor thinks that the friendly comments of the Hindu editors are only due to Expendiency.

HINDOSTHAN, 18th December, 1906.

Journalism in India.

81. The Hindi Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 18th December, regrets to notice that journalism which is regarded as the fourth power in England is so backward in India, and is for the most part in utterly incompetent hands. The editor suggests that the money collected to meet the expenses of the English editors may advantageously be spent in opening an institution for teaching journalism.

CHHATRA HITAISHI, December, 1906.

The present situation of India.

82. The Chhatra Hitaishi (Aligarh), for December, ascribes the degeneration of India to their lack of interest in education, and exhorts the Indians to take education into their own hands, and to work earnestly with Akbar and the Japanese as their models.

JASUS, 7th December, 1906.

Supply of uniforms to jail warders in the United Provinces.

83. The Jásus (Agra), of the 7th December, invites the attention of the Inspector General of Jails in these Provinces to the orders regarding the supply of incomplete uniform to jail warders, and suggests the desirability of jerseys and great coats also being supplied to them.

KANAUJ PUNCH, 8th December, 1906.

The Maulvis in India.

84. The Kanauj Punch, of the 8th December, says that the Maulvis in India are a source of considerable mischief to the country, that they begin by leading a life of piety, then take to humouring the people amongst whom they move and end with preaching and creating schisms, thus securing a following which helps them to spend the rest of their life in ease and affluence.

KANAUJ PUNCH, 8th December, 1906.

The preponderance of Hindus in Government offices.

85. The Kanauj Punch of the 8th December, says that the preponderance of the Hindus in Government offices is due to the fact that they can work much harder than the Muhammadans who expect Government to give them preferential consideration in view of the position which they occupied in India "a little more than a hundred years ago and of which the traditions have naturally not faded from their minds" while the Hindus have been leading a life of thraldom for several centuries past and are naturally milder, more energetic and hard working.

KANAUJ PUNCH, 8th December, 1906.

The poverty of India.

86. The Kanauj Punch of the 8th December, says that the Indians themselves are to blame for the existing poverty of India, which has been brought about by an utter neglect of indigenous arts and manufactures. The editor points out that a failure to give impetus to indigenous products at the present time when there is a rush for swadeshi manufactures is sure to seal the doom of India and suggests therefore that Indians should not miss the opportunity that has now presented itself for the amelioration of their unhappy lot.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM, 12th December, 1906.

The Civil Surgeon of Dinajpore.

87. The Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of the 12th December, while referring to the investigation carried on by the Magistrate of Dinajpore in respect of the suspected immoral connection of the Civil Surgeon with an inmate of the female hospital, remarks that if the suspicion is proved to have been based on facts, the female hospitals will be looked upon as unsafe for chaste and respectable women. The editor concludes with a sincere hope that Government will take serious notice of conduct of this sort.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th December,
1906.

Native.

88. The Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of the 12th December, says that the controversy in the Native and the Anglo-Indian Press on the word Native has elicited an article in the Fortnightly Review from Sir Roper Lethbridge, who points out that Indians of culture, some of whom are in no way inferior to the best students of English Literature in England, look upon the term as an insult, and suggests that the word should therefore cease to be used when a reference has to be made to Indians.

ZUL-QARNAIN,
14th December,
1906.

Life Insurance Companies.

89. The Zul-Qarnain (Budaun), of the 14th December, says that investments in life insurance are not suited to Indians, that they are in the first place contrary to the precepts of religion; secondly they are mostly owned by Europeans who may plead insolvency any time; thirdly the capital of these is invested neither in Government promissory notes nor in landed property; fourthly money paid up is liable to lapse on failure to pay any one instalment; sixthly it is always possible that the person insuring his life may inadvertently or through ignorance have given incorrect information on any one point to the company, which if discovered will entail the forfeiture of the sum due on the policy, and seventhly native women and children are put to considerable difficulties in realizing the money accruing to them when they have no male relations to help them.

RAHBAR,
14th December,
1906.

The road to promotion.

90. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 14th December, says that the experienced Anglo-Indian finds that merit is not essential to promotion if one can flatter and humour his official superiors from the Lieutenant-Governor downwards.

SANSAR MITRA,
18th December,
1906.

Introduction of the panchayat system in Patiala.

91. The Sansár Mitra (Allahabad), of the 18th December, expresses its high satisfaction at the good results achieved by the Panchayat system introduced in Patiala for the decision of petty cases, and suggests the advisability of Government taking steps to introduce it in these provinces as it is calculated to prove very beneficial to the poor.

OUDH AKHBAR,
19th December,
1906.

Cocaine and other intoxicants.

92. The Oudh Akhbár (Lucknow), of the 19th December, while eulogizing the action of Government in taking preventive measures against the free use and sale of cocaine, regrets to find that it has so far taken no steps to prevent or restrict the sale of liquor, opium and other intoxicants which are far more injurious than cocaine, in spite of the efforts made by Mr. Caine, and the promoters of the Temperance and the Total Abstinence Associations, and the sudden awakening of China to the deleterious effects of opium.

VI.—RAILWAY.

JASUS,
7th December,
1906.

Insufficiency of inter-class accommodation the trains.

93. The Jásus (Agra), of the 7th December, says that the Railway Companies have done all in their power to conduce to the convenience of Europeans while travelling in trains and regrets that no regard is had for the convenience of Indians. The editor invites the attention of the railway authorities to the many inconveniences to which the Indian nobility are put, not to speak of the hardships of third class passengers, owing to the very limited accommodation for inter-class passengers and suggests the desirability of steps being taken to remedy the evil.

NAIYAR-I-AZAM,
12th December,
1906.

The catering arrangements on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

94. The Naiyar-i-Ázam (Moradabad), of the 12th December, says that it is very much to be regretted if the Traffic Superintendent of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway has actually recommended that the present contractors should be given a further trial for one year and that the catering arrangements should be allowed to remain in their hands as heretofore. The editor expresses his inability to understand why there should be any predilection in their favour after the exposure of their unwarranted carelessness and neglect of public duty, and suggests that competition in the supply of provisions will be conducive to public convenience in a remarkable degree.

AWAZA-I-KHALQ,
16th December, 1906.

Coolies on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

95. The Awáza-i-Khalq (Benares), of the 16th December, invites the attention of the railway authorities and of the local Government to the exorbitant demands of the coolies on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway with which the travelling public have to comply though unwillingly. The editor says from personal experience that the conduct of the coolies is at times unbearable owing to the attitude they adopt when asked to carry things at a moderate rate.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
16th December, 1906.

Coolies on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway.

96. The Nizám-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 16th December, while complaining of the existing system of securing the services of coolies on the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway, points out that they are a source of income to the contractors, and the latter cannot therefore exercise due influence over them. The editor concludes with the remark that there is no reason why the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway line should adopt this unique procedure, instead of following the system observed on other lines.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th December, 1906.

The Rohilkhand-Kumaun Railway.

97. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) of the 16th December, feels highly gratified that the fencing wall in front of the mosque at the Budaun railway station has been ordered to be pulled down so as to avoid obstruction of the view of the mosque and the shops attached thereto. The editor expresses a wish that proper arrangements will soon be made for female waiting rooms which are urgently needed, and that a reduction will be made in the fares of the intermediate class on this line which at present is twice the third class fare.

ADVOCATE,
16th December, 1906.

Crime on the Uska-Tulshipur Railway.

98. A correspondent in the Advocate (Lucknow), of the 16th December, has contributed the following letter on Crime on the Uska-Tulshipur Railway :—"Will you be good enough to allow me to draw the attention of the police authorities of the Basti district to the fact that the opening of the Uska-Tulshipur Railway line has opened a field for the local and more specially the frontier thieves to carry on their horrible trade.

Bartni (district Basti) is a railway station adjacent to the Nepal frontier —the frontier boundary pillar being within sight from the station. It has got a goods-shed and not far from it lives the Engineer in charge of the line with his staff, the population aggregating about 200 souls.

Not to speak of thefts that have occurred from time to time within the railway limits, including two cases of house-breaking in the Engineer's camp (one occurring only the other day, on more than one occasion of late the thieves jumped into the running train, broke open the wagons and threw out grain bags alongside the line. To crown all an unprecedented, as I should call it, theft was committed in the Engineering Store Shed, the thieves carrying away a chouldari and some kegs of paint.

The most daring robbery was committed three months ago. The ballast train clerk whose duties required his living in the train was sleeping in a wagon standing in the station yard and at midnight the robbers entered into the wagons and stripped him of all he had at the point of spears and lathis. The police arrived in due course to enquire into the above cases but went back after wasting their time, stationery and forms. The Government Railway police have since stationed a constable, but not much can be expected from that solitary lal paggri.

The district police have also a village chaukidar or rather the skeleton of a chaukidar. So not much can be expected from him. He is too old to shout out the approach of thieves even if he happens to know anything of them. In fact he is never seen round the railway premises. He only comes when called for to report cases to the nearest thana (Dheburan) and the thanadar in his turn comes for enquiry, firm in his belief, that the thefts in the vicinity of the frontier cannot be brought to light.

Will the authorities take some steps to better the present state of affairs?

12th December 1906. A SYMPATHIZER.

CITIZEN,
17th December,
1906.

Complaints against the Eurasian and European ticket collectors at the East Indian Railway, Allahabad station.

99. The Citizen (Allahabad), of the 17th December, says that complaints against the Eurasian and European ticket collectors employed at Allahabad station by the East Indian Railway authorities in preference to Indian youths of position and respectability have, we are sorry to note, been growing rather too frequent. Only the other day, one was charged with criminal breach of trust and convicted; another, charged with similar offence, was of course discharged, but the ground for such discharge was that he could not be properly identified.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
16th December,
1906.

The pilgrimage to Mecca.

100. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 16th December, invites the attention of Government and of the railway authorities to the desirability of concession tickets being issued to pilgrims going to Mecca, and points out that if pilgrims are charged single fares for the double journey there will be a considerable increase of traffic, and there can therefore be no danger of any loss to the railway lines concerned.

VII.—POST OFFICE.

JASUS,
7th December,
1906.

Marking of pictorial cards as bearing.

101. The Jásus (Agra), of the 7th December, invites the attention of the Inspector-General of Post Offices to the unnecessary loss sustained by the public using pictorial post cards which are marked bearing under the recent orders, and points out that the orders on the subject should have been enforced after due intimation had been given to the public. The editor suggests the desirability of suspending these orders until the present stock of such cards is run out, and the public become aware of the orders recently passed.

RAFIQ PUNCH,
14th December,
1906.

Holidays in Post offices.

102. The Rafiq Punch (Moradabad), of the 14th December, regrets to find that the Muhammadans employed in post offices were not granted even a half holiday on the occasion of the last Id, though it is the greatest festival with the Muhammadans; and a half holiday is granted on Christmas and New Year's day.

RAFIQ-PUNCH,
14th December,
1906.

The Post office at Lucknow.

103. The Rafiq Punch (Moradabad), of the 14th December, says that the arrangements made for a night delivery of post to the residents of a particular quarter in the civil lines is a source of great inconvenience to the peons and clerks who have to remain on duty over and above the usual hours, and leads to little practical good. The editor looks upon this as an act of great cruelty to the staff concerned which is sure to tell upon their health, and suggests an increase of staff to cope with this increase of work, pointing out at the same time that the privilege of receiving night delivery should be extended to the whole city instead of being restricted to a particular quarter as it is at present.

OUDH PUNCH,
20th December,
1906.

The office of the Postmaster General, Lucknow.

104. A correspondent in the Oudh Punch (Lucknow), of the 20th December, complains of the hardships to which the clerks in the office of the Postmaster General at Lucknow have to submit owing to the insufficiency of the existing staff to cope with the increase of work, and expresses his apprehension that their health is bound to suffer under the hard duties they have to perform, and by keeping late hours in the office.

VIII.—NATIVE SOCIETIES AND RELIGIOUS AND SOCIAL MATTERS.

RAJPUT,
15th December,
1906.

The Rajputs in India.

105. The Rájput (Agra), of the 15th December, says that Indians are held in high esteem in Japan merely because they live in the country where Gautama Buddha was born. The editor remarks that it is a matter for regret that the Kshatriyas who belong to the same caste as Buddha did, should be so backward in every respect that the Rajas and Maharajas, who have the opportunity of doing incalculable good to millions of their subjects, should indulge in drink and debauchery, and concludes with exhorting them to awaken to a sense of their duty, and with pointing out that education is essential to their own improvement and to the regeneration of the people under their sway.

The Kshatriya Students Association, Benares.

RAJPUT, 15th December, 1906.

106. A correspondent in the Rajput (Agra), of the 15th December, expresses his gratification at the formation of Kshatriya Students Association at Benares, which, while not dealing with religious and political questions, aims at creating mutual sympathy and co-operation between the different classes of Kshatriyas, and concludes with exhorting Kshatriya students generally to form similar associations in various cities and towns.

Concession tickets for the Industrial Exhibition, Calcutta.

ARYA MITRA, 16th December, 1906.

107. The Árya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th December, expresses a hope that the suggestion of the 'Tribune' to the various Railway lines of India asking them to issue concession tickets for intermediate and third class passengers at a single fare for the double journey to visitors going to the Industrial Exhibition at Calcutta, as they do on the occasion of the Arya Samaj and Islamiya Anjuman Anniversary meetings, will be received favourably.

Mendicants in India.

TUHFA-I-HIND, 18th December, 1906.

108. The Tuhfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 18th December, while referring to the prosecution and conviction of a large gang of mendicants in Calcutta, suggests that similar measures if taken in other parts of the country will not only deter this class of idlers from plaguing the public when asking for charity, but will also diminish their number considerably. The editor feels highly gratified at learning that Swami Darshananand is making strenuous efforts to turn mendicants into useful and self-supporting members of society.

IX.—MISCELLANEOUS.

Two Muhammadan organs in India.

RAFIQ PUNCH, 14th December, 1906.

109. The Rafiq Punch (Budaun), of the 14th December, feels highly gratified at hearing that the Muhammadans in the Upper Provinces have purchased the Indian Daily Telegraph, and that they are arranging to have another daily organ of their own in Bengal.

(a).—Foreign.

MUFID-I-AM,
29th December,
1906.

The Madrasa-i-Islamia Saulatia in Mecca.

1. A correspondent in the Mufid-i-Ám (Agra), of the 29th December, invites the attention of Muhammadans to the miserable condition of the Madrasa-i-Islamia Saulatia in Mecca for want of sufficient funds at its disposal, and suggests the desirability of each individual paying one rupee to the school, the maintenance of which is calculated to be beneficial to the nation.

AL-ISLAM,
21st December,
1906.

The Shah of Persia.

2. Al-Islam (Aligarh) of the 21st December, feels gratified at learning that the Shah of Persia is still alive, though it is much to be regretted that he is in a precarious state of health (vide paragraph 2, Selections, No. 51).

(b).—Home.

RAHBAR,
21st December,
1906.

Mr. Tilak and the Congress.

3. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st December, while referring to the comments in the Tribune on the news published in the Jam-i-Jamshed regarding a party of 500 delegates being taken by Mr. Tilak to Calcutta with a view to join Babu Bipin Chandra Pal and defeat the party of moderates, says that, be this as it may, no one can doubt the sincerity and patriotism of Mr Tilak, who will not take a single step which is calculated to injure the interests of the country.

RAHBAR,
21st December,
1906.

The Indian National Congress.

4. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st December, says that the opposition amongst the political leaders in the Punjab is coming to an end, and it is to be hoped that the Congress, which could not be held this year in the Punjab in consequence of these differences, will hold its sittings next year in Lahore or in Dehli.

SANSAR MITRA,
25th December,
1906.

The Indian National Congress.

5. The Sansar Mitra (Allahabad), of the 25th December, after recounting the benefits conferred by Government in pursuance of the representations made by the Congress, invites the Muhammadans to join its fold, and if necessary to point out their difficulties and to discuss them with the leaders of the Congress before condemning the latter institution as disloyal.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH,
28th December,
1906.

The Indian National Congress.

6. The Indian Daily Telegraph (Lucknow), of the 28th December, says that the Congress speech of Mr. Naoroji is undoubtedly a most able one from the Congress point of view. In it he has shown very clearly the methods which are being adopted by the Hindus and Parsis to secure their immediate self-government. A stirring appeal has been made in England, where a very genuine response to the appeal has been made; but it is principally because the real situation is not understood at home. People and politicians alike—the first unknowingly, but the latter knowingly—consider the voice of the Hindu Congress the voice of the Indian nation and err in judgment accordingly. It is the point on which all turns, the question of the national character of the Congress. Despite the fact that Hindus have been endeavouring for years past to capture the Muhammadans for the Congress movement—they are endeavouring to do so now—there is far too much of an "Hindustan for the Hindus" flavour, however, about the Congress programme to please Muhammadans. Mr. Naoroji addressed himself very strongly to Muhammadans and his references to Sir Saiyid Ahmad Khan were both interesting and well-toned, but words alone fail to make an impression on Muhammadans. Ere they countenance any portion of the work of the Congress they need an assurance that the Extremists are to be disavowed. Disloyalty in any shape or form they will not favour, and Mr. Naoroji and every other Congress leader must moderate the tone of his speech if he would awaken any response in the hearts of Muhammadans. An appeal for unity is a splendid one: no Muhammadan can deliberately set himself against the idea of eventual self-government, for "hope springs eternal in the human breast," and an individual without that hope cannot be termed a rational, thinking being; he is an automaton, an unevolved entity awaiting that unfolding of intellectual capacity time and evolution will afford him eventually. But it has to be borne in mind that there is always a tide in the affairs of men and one has to wait for that tide before one can launch one's craft to gain fortune's breeze. To give a gift which is not appreciated and instead is abused, is worse than to have given no gift at all : it does not help on, it throws back. There are many conscientious, thoughtful people who reflect after this fashion on the subject of India and autonomy. Again, the Hindu ideal of self-government may not be the Muhammadan ideal, and doubtless the Muhammadan would strongly object to his Hindu brother forcing such an ideal on him by virtue of superior numbers at the polling booths. He does object now to the bare idea of such a thing; and if autonomy is ever to be given a trial in this country, Hindus must give proof to Muhammadans that they are actuated by higher motives than those they show at present. It is to be feared that all this noise and bustle is to impress everyone with a sense of the tremendous importance of the Hindu community in India. One is willing to admit a fair share of importance—it is the undue influence or importance one is not willing to admit—and if any plea for a national unity is to be considered a genuine one, it must be one which is fair to and elevates all parties.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th December, 1906.

The Moslem All-India Confederacy.

7. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th December, while expressing its gratification at the formation of the Moslem All-India Confederacy attributes its existence mainly to the exertions of the Nawab of Dacca and Nawab Salim-ullah Khan. The editor says that the recent elevation of certain leading Muhammadans to high offices is due to the efforts of the Muhammadans, who have of late begun to act on the Biblical teaching "Knock and it shall be opened unto thee."

OUDH AKHBAR,
26th December, 1906.

The Moslem All-India Confederacy.

8. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 26th December, says that the Moslem All-India Confederacy, though only a modified form of the Indian National Congress, is calculated to injure the interests of poor Muhammadans. It seeks for the Muhammadans alone the rights and privileges that the Indian National Congress seeks for Hindus and Muhammadans alike, and it will be seen eventually that it only reaffirms the resolutions passed hitherto by the Indian National Congress.

HINDUSTANI,
19th December, 1906.

Muhammadans and politics.

9. A correspondent in the Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 19th December, says that the Hon'ble Sir Saiyid Ahmad began by inculcating a theory of non-interference in politics, but started eventually the "Muhammadan Oriental Defence Association" in which he took a prominent part with certain others of his contemporaries who shared his views. The Muhammadans at present are divided into two sections politically, the first consists of men who wish to form a political association of Muhammadans, and the second of those who share the views of the entire Muhammadan community in India and wish that their voice should reach the ears of Government. He deprecates the policy of opposition to the Congress, and points out that not one of the resolutions passed so far by the Congress is opposed to the interests of Muhammadans, nor is it possible to point out one single resolution which, though beneficial to other communities is detrimental to the interests of the Muhammadans.

HINDUSTANI,
19th December, 1906.

The Muhammadan Political Association.

10. The Hindustani (Lucknow), of the 19th December, while discussing the merits of Nawab Salim-ullah's manifesto issued recently with a view to form a Moslem Political Association, condemns his hostile attitude to the Congress, and considers his proposal to support all Government measures as wholly superfluous. The editor expresses a hope that educated Muhammadans will endeavour to work this association on the lines suggested by Nawab Mushtaq Husain, and that the confederacy should, after scrutinizing the resolutions passed by the Congress, adopt such of them as are calculated to do good to all communities alike and invite the attention of the Congress to and ask for a further consideration and modification of such of them as are injurious to the interests of the Muhammadans.

AGRA AKHBAR,
28th December, 1906.

The Muhammadan political association.

11. The Agra Akhbar, of the 28th December, says that the fact that the need of a Muhammadan political association has been felt immediately after the Muhammadan deputation proves beyond all doubt that Sir Saiyid was in the wrong. The editor is at a loss to know who will work the association, and asks rather sarcastically if those who had to withdraw their support to the Urdu (Nawab Mohsin-ul-Mulk) will be able to take the lead in managing the association. The editor suggests the desirability of the Muhammadans conferring with the leaders of the Congress, and of asking them to remove the existing defects before starting a separate association of their own.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th December, 1906.

The President of the British Indian Association.

12. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly) of the 24th December, while extolling the Maharaja of Balrampur for his liberal donations to public institutions, expresses its disapproval of his election as President of the British Indian Association, on the ground that he lacks administrative ability and has a very poor knowledge of the policy and duties of a landed proprietor. The editor is of opinion that the Maharaja cannot perform the duties of the president creditably, as his duties as such necessitate his standing forth as the spokesman of the Talukdars of Oudh. He concludes with the remark that Raja Ali Muhammad Khan of Mahmudabad is much better fitted for the office both by his experience and education than the Maharaja of Balrampur.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR,
25th December, 1906.

The Boers and the Indians.

13. The Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares) of the 25th December, regrets to find that Government does not confer self-government on the Indians whose conduct throughout has been characterized by loyalty, though it has conferred the privilege on the Boers in spite of the fact that they have been a cause of considerable annoyance to Government only recently.

II.—AFGHANISTAN AND TRANS-FRONTIER.

EXPRESS,
20th December, 1906.

The Amir's orders permitting the servants of his State to perform pilgrimages to Mecca.

14. The Express (Lucknow), of the 20th December, says that the Amir has recently notified that all servants of the State are free to make a pilgrimage to Mecca, and that leave of absence will be freely granted to every one applying. The applications for leave are said to have been so numerous that orders on this subject are held in abeyance. For the time being the transaction of public business at Kabul would have been at a standstill if all applications had been granted.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
23rd December, 1906.

The pocket expenses of the Amir of Kabul.

15. The Cawnpore Gazette, of the 23rd December, says that the Amir has sent for a sum of twenty-one thousand rupees for his pocket expenses, as the Kabuli rupee is not current in India. The sum will be paid out of the money due to him and in deposit in the Indian Exchequer.

MUFID-I-AM,
24th December, 1906.

The Amir's visit.

16. The Mufid-i-Am (Agra), of the 24th December, expresses gratification at learning that the District Magistrate of Agra has declined to raise public subscriptions with a view to decorate the road from the city to Chhipi Tola, considering such a course unnecessary when Government is prepared to spend thousands of rupees on the reception of the Amir.

III.—NATIVE STATES.

RAHBAR,
21st December, 1906.

The reception of the Maharaja of Travancore at Madras.

17. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st December, while referring to the recent reception accorded to the Maharaja of Travancore at Madras, considers the conduct of the Under-Secretary who had been sent to receive the Maharaja as most objectionable, in that he stepped into the state carriage before the Maharaja and sat on the right of His Highness. The editor remarks that the Governors and the Governor-General have hitherto been in the habit of treating native chiefs as friends, and points out that the Resident, who was present, should have been sent to receive His Highness. He concludes with the hope that His Excellency the Governor of Madras will take steps to prevent the recurrence of a slight of this sort in future.

HINDOSTHAN,
23rd December, 1906.

Ladies' club at Gwalior.

18. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 23rd December, says that a ladies' club has been formed in Gwalior by the Maharani, with a view to promote friendly relations amongst respectable ladies, and to enable them to exchange their ideas with one another. European ladies are invited to the club, and all sorts of sports and amusements are provided at the club. The editor suggests that similar clubs, if formed in other parts of the country, will considerably improve the status of Indian women.

Hyderabad.

NIZAM-UL-MULK,
24th December,
1906.

19. The Nizam-ul-Mulk (Moradabad), of the 24th December, says that Englishmen are practically monopolizing every department in Hyderabad, because natives are jealous of one another, and far from co-operating, they are trying to injure their brother officers in the State; while Englishmen are working in harmony and help one another as best they can.

20. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 21st December, feels much gratified to learn that the Hon'ble Mr. Shahdin and the Hon'ble Maulvi Sharf-ud-din have been elevated from the bar to the bench of the Punjab and the Calcutta High Courts respectively.

A Muhammadan Judge in the Calcutta High Court.

MUFID-I-AM,
24th December,
1906.

21. The Mufid-i-Ám (Agra), of the 24th December, feels highly gratified at the appointment of a Muhammadan Judge in the Calcutta High Court, and considers the elevation of Mr. Sharf-ud-din to the bench as a matter for congratulation to the entire community. The editor thanks Lord Minto for giving practical proofs of the sincerity of his promises to the All-India Muhammadan deputation by conferring high offices in various departments on Muhammadans. The editor concludes with expressing a hope that the administration of Lord Minto, who has already given proofs of his sincerity, nobleness of heart and good statesmanship by his impartial dealings towards all classes, will prove itself superior to that of his predecessors and that he will carry with him the good wishes of the people when he leaves India at the close of his term of office as Viceroy.

The panchayet system in India.

OUDH AKHBAR,
24th December,
1906.

22. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 24th December, says that litigation in British courts is very expensive and leads to much inconvenience to the parties concerned, and suggests that reversion to the old panchayet system is calculated to effect large savings in the shape of court fees and lawyers' fees, and to save litigants the worry caused by seeking redress in courts of law. The editor points out that a saving of sixty lakhs of rupees has been effected in Patiala during the last four years, and suggests the desirability of its being given a trial in other States, and in British India.

23. The Arya Mitra (Agra), of the 16th December, attributes opium and race-gambling in Calcutta and elsewhere to the influence of European civilization, which is fraught with danger to the Indians. The editor regrets that the police are so unmindful of their duties and take no steps to check gambling.

Rash driving in Cawnpore.

CAWNPORE GAZETTE,
23rd December,
1906.

24. The Cawnpore Gazette, of the 23rd December, complains of rash and furious ekka driving at night even in the most crowded parts of the city, and invites the attention of the local police to the matter.

Police reform.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th December,
1906.

25. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th December, while referring to the police reforms ordered recently, regrets that the punishments of black mark entries and forfeiture of leave amongst certain others are not appealable, though practical instances have come under notice, which prove conclusively that they are dangerous weapons in the hands of certain Superintendents, who at times do all that they can to harass their subordinates. The editor thinks that increase of pay should not have been given at all to the Superintendents of police, and that at all events they should not have received promotions before their subordinates. As regards the Deputy Superintendents, he is of opinion that proper selections have not been made this year, and suggests, that the appointments should be conferred on men of sterling merit who combine experience with ability. He hopes that Government will reconsider the question of appointments to this grade. As regards the Inspectors, he thinks that they have practically received no promotion, and points out that the claims of a number of really deserving men have been overlooked. The salaries of Sub-Inspectors under the new scheme are enough to enable a man to live honestly, and the lot of the Head Constables cannot be said to be a bad one, though their salaries might have been raised in view of the fact that selections for the Sub-Inspector's grade are made from amongst them. He concludes with the remark that Government has made a serious blunder in putting off for so long the promotions of constables, who are perhaps the most important factor in the police force.

Female education.

27. The Rahbar (Moradabad), of the 21st December, complains of inattention to female education, and says that the little attention bestowed hitherto has not led to any practical good results. The editor suggests the desirability of female education being left exclusively in the hands of Indians, and points out that European officers can be successful only when some progress has been made in this direction.

28. The Zul Qarnain (Budaun), of the 21st December, says that the Hon'ble Maulvi Sharf-ud-din, barrister-at-law, has been elected as the president of the forthcoming Muhammadan conference to be held at Dacca, and expresses a hope that the election will be highly gratifying to the entire Muhammadan community in India.

HINDOSTHAN,
22nd December,
1906.

Night school at Agra.

29. A correspondent in the Hindi Hindosthán (Kalakankar), of the 22nd December, feels much gratified at learning that a night school has been opened at Agra with a view to educate the poor who cannot spare any time during the day when they are working for a living. The school is attended by about two hundred labourers. He remarks that Babu Paresh Nath Banerji deserves the highest credit for the self-sacrifice he is making, and suggests that his noble example should be followed by people in other districts.

HINDOSTHAN,
26th December,
1906.

Technical education.

30. A correspondent in the Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 26th December, while referring to the views of the United Provinces Times, suggesting the necessity of technical education being encouraged in India in order to infuse the spirit of independent enterprise and moral courage amongst Indians, says that the Indians, after receiving technical education along with their training in schools under the present system of education, should take steps to earn their livelihood by starting factories. He concludes with the suggestion that technical and industrial schools should be opened in order to spread technical education, and that a national fund should be raised to enable students to complete their education in foreign countries.

INDIAN PEOPLE,
23rd December,
1906.

The administration of Sir James Digges LaTouche.

32. The leading article of the Indian People (Allahabad), of December the 23rd, is a review of the career of His Honour Sir J. J. D. LaTouche, the retiring Lieutenant-Governor.

The editor regards his administration as weak. He considers that he was too readily guided by the judgments and feelings of the members of his service, with whom he was naturally a popular Lieutenant-Governor. The five years of his incumbency may be regarded as a period of rest and peace for the provinces, which has not been marked by any legislation or measure of a far-reaching character.

The editor condemns the action of Sir James LaTouche in abolishing the competitive test for the Provincial Civil Service; and also the handing over the control of district board and schools to district officers. He characterizes his plague policy as weak. He commends his interest and efforts in the cause of education, particularly in the case of primary and secondary education, and regards his educational policy as the main thing for which Sir James LaTouche's regime will be remembered in these provinces.

His sympathy and kindness of heart made his personality generally beloved by his subordinates and by the many who have benefited at his hands.

BHARAT JIWAN,
17th December,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

33. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 17th December, regrets to find that the Indians, though clamouring against taxation, are not taking sufficient interest in promoting indigenous manufactures, which alone can prevent the drain of Indian wealth into foreign countries. Comparing the British rule with that of Muhammadan kings, he says that the people under their former rulers used country manufactures and were happy in consequence, and had to be well versed in the use of arms with a view to protect themselves against the attacks of thieves and other marauders.

RAHBAR,
21st December,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

34. The editor of the Rahbar while referring in its issue of the 21st December, to the attempt made to supplant foreign liquor by country wines, points out that liquor and tobacco should be discouraged altogether by the promoters of the swadeshi movement.

HINDOSTHAN,
27th December,
1906.

The swadeshi movement.

35. The Hindi Hindosthan (Kalakankar), of the 27th December, rejoices at the deep interest that the Indians are taking in holding exhibitions of indigenous arts and agricultural products, as they are calculated to promote Indian industries. The editor suggests that these exhibitions should not be regarded as mere fancy fairs, but that they should be turned to good account, and in a practical way promote the interests of the country.

KHATRI-HITKARI,
November, 1906.

Foreign sugar.

36. The Khatri-Hitkari (Benares), for November, notes with regret that the Khatris use impure foreign sugar in the performance of religious rites, and urges them to discontinue its use as it is not only less sweet, but it is also against the religious prejudices of Hindus.

BHARAT JIWAN,
17th December,
1906.

Foreign sugar.

37. The Bharat Jiwan (Benares), of the 17th December, expresses its dissent from the views expressed in the Pioneer of the 14th idem in connection with the boycott of foreign sugar in Amritsar, and points out that the swadeshi movement, though calculated to affect English trade considerably, is in no way subversive of British rule. The editor exhorts the Indian public to promote the movement as best they can, without being in the least influenced by the clamour of the Anglo-Indian Press which constantly aims at injuring Indian interests.

BARANASI,
18th December,
1906.

The Hindus and Muhammadans in Eastern Bengal.

38. The Baranasi (Benares), of the 18th December, says that the enmity created between the Hindus and Muhammadans in Eastern Bengal is being fomented by certain district authorities there, and suggests that it is highly desirable that His Honour the present Lieutenant-Governor should interfere in the matter and put a stop to the existing ill-feeling between the two communities.

SULAIMANI AKHBAR,
13th November,
1906.

Anglo-Indians.

39. The Sulaimani Akhbar (Benares), of the 13th November, received on the 28th December, while referring to certain remarks in the Pioneer pointing out that the prestige of European officers is considerably less than what it was fifty years back, says that the country then was in the hands of the East India Company, that it changed hands after the Mutiny, and is now governed directly by the Sovereign, and that the Queen Empress Victoria has promised equality of rights with Englishmen to her Indian subjects, who still enjoy the same rights and privileges under her successor. The editor says that inter-marriage between Europeans and Indians should make the relations between the two nations more friendly, instead of tending in any way to lower the prestige of Englishmen. He does not agree with the correspondent of the Pioneer in thinking that Englishmen have become ease-loving and pleasure-seeking, and points out that the offices are filled chiefly by Hindus because they have toiled hard to qualify themselves for the work who, unlike Muhammadans, are very hard-working and submissive to their superiors, though they cannot cringe and flatter—a thing that no hard-working man can be expected to do. The editor concludes with the remark that Englishmen can command the respect of the Indians only if they respect their feelings and do not lose their own self-respect.

ANAND,
25th December,
1906.

The Hindus and the Englishmen.

40. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 25th December, says that the British rule has been a boon to the Hindus in particular, as it has raised them from the degraded position of slavery to Muhammadans and placed them on a level with the dominant race. It is therefore impossible that they should ever prove ungrateful to their British rulers. Unlike the Muhammadans who can boast of counting a number of Muhammadan kings amongst the followers of the Prophet, the Hindus have all their hopes centered on India and on the British Government. The editor then points out that the Indian Muhammadans have a great predilection in favour of the Sultan, though the relations between him and England are far from friendly. He then refers to the Pan-Islamic movement which has been started by the Sultan with a view to create cordial relations amongst Muhammadans generally, and expresses his inability to understand why Government is showing undue favour to Muhammadans, in spite of their loyalty to, and friendship for, the Sultan, whom they regard as their Caliph.

RAFIQ PUNCH,

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th December,
1906.

The Vigilance committee.

42. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th December, says that the prejudicial treatment accorded by the Hindus has necessitated the formation of the Vigilance committee, which is intended not only to protect the interests of the Muhammadans, but also to checkmate the unpleasant treatment accorded by Hindus to the Muhammadans. The editor expresses a hope that the example set by the Calcutta Muhammadans will be followed in other important towns and cities, and similar committees will be formed all over the country.

ROHILKHAND GAZETTE,
24th December,
1906.

Pandit Jwala Prasad, District Magistrate of Etah.

43. The Rohilkhand Gazette (Bareilly), of the 24th December, while expressing its surprise at the apathy of the present Government to the complaints against Pandit Jwala Prasad, expresses a hope that due notice will be taken of his prejudicial attitude towards the Muhammadans by the new Lieutenant-Governor, who is said to mete out justice strictly instead of tempering it with mercy as has been the case with Sir James Digges LaTouche throughout his tenure of office.

OUDH AKHBAR,
24th December,
1906.

Mendicants in India.

44. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 24th December, says that charity in India is misdirected, that men with robust health profit by it, while poor helpless persons are allowed to starve, and that it is necessary to bring mendicants within the purview of legislation. The editor suggests the adoption of the system existing in China, where mendicants with strong constitutions are employed as labourers in Government institutions and helpless persons are sent away to poorhouses; and concludes with pointing out that some provision should invariably be made for ill-paid Government officials, whose low pensions are too small to free them from want.

TUHFA-I-HIND,
25th December,
1906.

Vaccination.

45. The Tuhfa-i-Hind (Bijnor), of the 25th December, considers the use of lymph taken from children as highly objectionable for purposes of vaccination owing to its tendency to communicate to the person vaccinated hereditary and contagious diseases from which the person whose lymph is used is suffering.

ANAND,
25th December,
1906.

Misfortunes of certain Punjabis in America.

46. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 25th December, while referring to the sad lot of certain Punjabis who, having failed to get some work in America, took to begging and were sent to jail in consequence, invites the attention of the Indians to their misfortune and implores them to do something to relieve them of their present difficulties.

ANAND,
25th December,
1906.

Babu Ganga Prasad Varma.

47. The Anand (Lucknow), of the 25th December, while eulogizing Babu Ganga Prasad Varma of Lucknow for the self-sacrifice he has made throughout his life to promote the political interests of the country, expresses a wish that his noble example may be followed in other towns and cities.

KANAUJ PUNCH,
14th December,
1906.

Hindi.

48. The Kanauj Punch, of the 14th December, says that Hindi is the language and Deva Nagri the general script of the country. The majority of the people in these Provinces, including children, can read and write Hindi very well, and its use in Government publications will therefore conduce to public convenience. The country is very grateful to Sir Antony MacDonnell for the deep interest he took in Hindi; but the editor regrets the cold treatment it has received at the hands of the present Government, with the result that the orders passed by Sir Antony on the subject are now utterly disregarded by the officials in Government offices and courts, and the large expenditure incurred in printing forms both in Hindi and Urdu has simply been thrown away. Urdu is known to very few persons amongst the masses, who at times get into serious trouble by misreading the shiskasta Urdu used in summonses and other processes issued from courts. It is also much to the detriment of the public that they remain quite ignorant of Government orders and circulars issued in Urdu. The editor concludes with expressing a hope that Sir James Digges LaTouche will, before resigning office, do something to promote the cause of Hindi, which will lead to public satisfaction, and that on assuming charge of his office Sir Hewett will take steps to introduce Hindi in Government offices and order the publication of a Hindi edition of the Government Gazette. He concludes with an appeal to the promoters of the Hindi, to the Nagri Pracharni Sabha, and to his contemporaries to take up the matter in earnest.

OUDH AKHBAR,
25th December,
1906.

Hindi and Urdu.

49. The Oudh Akhbar (Lucknow), of the 25th December, says that the verbs, the pronouns and the prepositions are Hindi, that the nouns alone are Persian or Arabic terms, and that the language known as Urdu is therefore essentially Hindi in its formation. The editor suggests that the Muhammadans have no reason to grumble at the attempt made to write Urdu in Nagri characters, and that they should not be afraid of the language being superseded by Hindi, as any attempt to introduce purely Sanskrit words will end in failure just the same as it would in the case of hard Persian and Arabic words. The language has existed for centuries and no sudden change will receive public approbation.

50. The Cawnpore Gazette, of the 23rd December, says that the officiating hands employed in the North-Western Railway are not given permanent appointments when occasion arises, that their applications for leave are rejected on frivolous grounds and that they are required to produce death certificates when applying for leave to attend the funeral of some relative. The editor considers their lot as extremely deplorable, and hopes that the Railway authorities will take early steps to redress their grievances.

INDIAN DAILY TELEGRAPH,
29th December, 1906.

A railway experience.

51. A correspondent in the Indian Daily Telegraph, of the 29th December, says as follows:—"I was travelling from Fyzabad by the train leaving that station in the morning at 11-20 on 25th instant. The guard of this train after leaving a couple of stations got so drunk that he was entirely speechless and the work was carried on by two more guards who were travelling with him in his van, but they were not so bad. I am sure this sort of behaviour is not allowed by the Railway Authorities as the public travellers are put to great danger.

On arrival at Lucknow station I enquired this guard's name, and was told that his name was Garden."

AL ISLAM,

Cow-killing.

52. Al Islam (Aligarh), of the 28th December, says that the Muhammadans sacrifice cows because they are so cheap and that they do not have the remotest intention of injuring the religious feelings of the Hindus. The sacrifices as a rule are made inside enclosed places and cannot be seen by outsiders. Besides, thousands of cows are killed every day in regiments to which the Hindus do not raise the slightest objection. The editor then quotes references from the Yajur Veda and the Manava Dharma Shastra, which according to him, sanction the sacrifice of cows. He further points out that considering that the Hindus eat milk and butter, they should have no objection to others eating beef. He concludes with remarking that they use shoes made of cows' leather, and considers it ridiculous that they should not use beef and that they should so much object to the sacrifice of cows.
